Public Meeting after the Convention.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

In pursuance of an invitation addressed to the Democratic citizens of the State of New-York, whose in favor of maintaining the political principles and practice of JEFFERSON and JACKSON, and TOMPKINS and SILAS WRIGHT, a Convention was held yesterday in the Market Hall, Syracuse, for the purpose of taking such action and forming such plans for the advancement of their ends as the present aspect of political affairs seems to demand.

The attendance was composed exclusively of gentlemen who have hitherto been prominently identified with the Radical Democracy of the State, and whose personal standing and political influence are such as to command respect.

When the hour for the meeting had arrived, Mr. FRANK POSTER, of Schenectady, read the call of the meeting, and in compliance with an arrangement entered into at an informal meeting held during the morning, nominated Hon. B. WRIGHT, of Erie, for temporary Chairman.

The nomination was received and confirmed with applause.

The Chairman, on taking his seat, said:

GENTLEMEN—I make my acknowledgments for the honor you have done me, and beg to know

[illegible]

Churchill, T. Jenkins, A. S. Thurston, O. H. Palmer, F. J. Fyfman.

SECRETARIES.

C. J. Folger, C. A. Munger, A. W. Eaton, J. R. Gay, H. D. Rich.

The Report was received with loud applause, and adopted unanimously.

Mr. JAMES C. SMITH and Mr. MARVIN J. TOWNSEND were appointed to conduct Mr. WRIGHT to the Chair, who was introduced by the retiring President amid reiterated applause.

The President said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: I thank you for the distinguished honor which you have conferred upon me on this occasion. The cause which has brought us together is one to us, and to those whom we represent, of great and abiding interest. [Applause.] If the result of our deliberations here is to separate us from any portion of that great party in association with which we have most of us passed the best years of our lives, we cannot, though confidently every step which we take, be, gentlemen, if we go back to the purest of wisdom to direct our course—if we go back to the early days of the Republic and to the infancy of the great Republican Party—if we go back to the days of THOMAS JEFFERSON—a name, let me add, whose memory is not less dear to us because, if he were living to day, he would be driven an exile from his native State, and would not be allowed to migrate to the great domain which he added to the possessions of our country west of the Mississippi—[Applause]—if we go back, then, gentlemen, to those times, and drink deep of the fountain of Freedom, it will be our own fault if we go far astray. [Applause.] Coming down to more recent days, to the days of MADISON, of SHARPE, of young men who are no longer with us, but who were yet men of our own times—men with whom we fought side by side, who never betrayed us—men whom we never deserted—if we plant ourselves, gentlemen, where they planted themselves—if we adopt the principle which we have so often heard so eloquently and earnestly enforced from their own lips, we need not fear to abide by the result. [Applause.] Those men, gentlemen, were Democrats because they believed in Democracy, and not because it was the name of a platform laid down for them, or laid down over them. [Loud laughter and applause.] They looked for and gathered wisdom from the honest and sure instincts of the popular mind—they gathered strength from the popular will. They did not look to Washington for instructions or to Cincinnati for principles. [Renewed applause.] If we follow in their footsteps I have no fears that we shall ever have occasion to regret the course which we have taken. I had the honor, gentlemen, to be a member of a Convention which assembled in this City prior to the Presidential election of 1848. That Convention laid there, and here, as one of the corner stones of the Democracy of New-York, a stone of Jefferson granite—opposition to the extension of slavery. [Loud applause.] I see about me the faces of many men who were with me delegates to the National Convention which assembled at Baltimore that year, and I claim that as representatives of the Democracy of New-York we proved ourselves true to the great trust reposed in us.

From we came out of that Convention—when the principles of our Constitution were trampled in the dust, we came here and we submitted our action to the Democracy of New-York. We were sustained by a vote of from 110,000 to 120,000. We stand now where we stood then. [Applause.] We stand upon those principles we stood upon then. [Applause.] A few may have been seduced from our ranks by the allurements of office or the charms of power, but I firmly believe that the phalanx now where they were then. [Applause.] I know that they are where they were then—if I may be allowed, the expression—only more so. [Applause.] And I am impatient for the day to come when they will record their verdict on the issues before us.

I will not, gentlemen, detain you further from the important business before you, except to ask your kindly aid, and if need be, your indulgence, in discharging the duties which you have imposed upon me. [Loud applause.]

Mr. D. DUDLEY FIELD then came forward and submitted the report of the Committee on Report and Resolutions, in substance as follows:

YOUNG DEMOCRATS: The time has come for Democrats to declare their independence of those picked assemblies which have lately assumed to dictate measures and candidates of the Democracy. The glorious Party of glorious memory, which spoke and acted for Freedom, has been put into the hands of office-holders and politicians, adventurers, serving as the tools of a slave-holding oligarchy. For more than ten years, measures of the General Government have been directed mainly to the increase of Slave States. One measure followed upon another, bolder than the last, until we have violence raging in the Federal Capital, and civil war raging in the Territories. For the consummation of such measures the veto have been purchased, the timid awed by threats of disunion, the peace-loving quieted by promises of future quietness, and the resistant and resisting silenced, and overborne by clamor and force and effect of party. Each success has led to new aggressions until at last the weak man now at the head of the Government, stimulated by a Senator of Illinois, in a rivalry for a Presidential nomination, and believing that the best means of securing it was to secure the entire Southern vote, and the best means of obtaining that, a new sacrifice to Slavery, attempted to force through Congress the repeal of an existing law which a generation had been affected by more than a third of a century past—a terrible damnogmen succeeded in effecting the repeal, though they had their reward. By this act of treason, unparalleled even in our day of political crime, one of the fairest regions of our country, and indeed of the world, has been converted into a field of battle, where citizens of a common country are fighting with each other for the introduction or exclusion of human servitude. Such another spectacle the world does not present, and the end of it is dependent upon the event of a Presidential election.

[illegible] then attacks the Squatter Sovereignty doctrine, stating that if the people of the Territories have a right to govern themselves, they will elect their Governors and Legislature accordingly, and that the true question is, what legislation on the subject of Slavery in the Territories is the judgement and conscience of the country demands? It reviews the affairs of Kansas at the present time, and the prospects for the future, and says our only safety is to stop where we are, to make Kansas a free State, and to punish the authors of the present agitation, and in that way—for that is the only way in which it can be done—put an end to the agitation. How is this to be accomplished? By rejecting the Cincinnati Convention and its platform, for they are inseparable.

[illegible] reviews the action of the Cincinnati Convention, and shows that Radical Democrats [illegible] Mr. BUCHANAN with consistency; [illegible] antecedents are all Democratic, and strongly [illegible] Slavery. He is known to be a man of great [illegible] energy, perjury and intrigue. In his [illegible] the Presidential chair will be [illegible] administered.

[illegible] have therefore nominated him for the Presidency, and his associate, Mr. DALLAS, for the Vice Presidency, and we ask you, the Democrats of New-York, to ratify this nomination. We make no appeal to the South. We remember that the South are our brethren, and we mean to conciliate them as such, but they shall not interfere with our rights in the free States, nor fasten the chains upon Freedom throughout the Territories are matters enough to be discussed, and enough to determine their own institutions.

[illegible] then criticises the central policy of the Administration, urging a united effort for its overthrow, and concluding by saying: "If Mr. BUCHANAN is elected Kansas is lost. But if Mr. FREMONT is elected Kansas is free, and, thus assisting, we shall have gained a Union and for the other, and we earnestly ask our fellow Democrats to aid us in the work."

The address was received with loud cheers.

Mr. FRANK then proceeded to read the following Resolutions:

[illegible] as the last Convention of the Democratic Party in this State, and late Convention at Cincinnati have not only kept silence [illegible] the public disorders and violence [illegible] now unhappily prevail, but have [illegible] resolutions on the subject of Slavery [illegible] resolution which are at variance with the [illegible] and principles of the Democracy, we [illegible] in their fealty and intimacy in their [illegible] also as the question of [illegible] has been forced by the Administration and the Cincinnati Convention into prominence, and is made by politicians the [illegible] which all other questions turn—therefore

Resolved, By the Democrats of New-York, here [illegible] representing the Democracy of the State, that we repudiate those Conventions and all their proceedings, and will not act independently of them as if they had never assembled.

Resolved, That as Democrats we stand upon the [illegible] of JEFFERSON and JACKSON, TOMPKINS and [illegible] Wright—on principles which do not change with the clamor of packed conventions, or spasms of secession after nominations, and because the extension of Slavery has never been, and can never be the purpose or result, immediate or remote, of the true Democracy. We hereby declare our unchangeable hostility to it, and our firm resistance to it by every lawful means. We will vote for no man who contributes to it, directly or indirectly, and we will oppose the election of any person who does not oppose it as we do.

Resolved, That because the nominees of the Cincinnati Convention are pledged to make the resolutions of that Convention their guide and rule of conduct, and because their election would prolong and tend to perpetuate the deplorable misrule of the present Administration, and because the exigencies of the times demand the union of all who oppose the extension of Slavery, and the waving, for the present, of other questions of subordinate importance, and because the opinions of JOHN C. FREMONT and WILLIAM L. DAYTON, on this subject, agree with our own, and there is much in their history and character to commend them to our regard, we hereby nominate them for the offices respectively of President and Vice-President of the United States, and will use every honorable effort to secure their election that we may remove the Presidential office from the degradation into which it has fallen, and the politics of the country from the corruption which is fast undermining our best institutions.

Resolved, That the chief practical question in the Presidential election is the question of Freedom or Slavery in Kansas. The election of Mr. BUCHANAN would make Kansas a Slave State, and give courage to the slave element in our National Government, while the election of Mr. FREMONT will make Kansas a Free State, and reduce Slavery to what it was in the better days of the Republic, a purely local institution, determinable by the States each for itself, over which the other States have no control and for it no responsibility.

Resolved, That as respects other questions of National and State policy, though the Administration and the Cincinnati Convention have made them to be all swallowed up in this one question of Slavery extension, yet we are none the less attached to Democratic principles and measures, and none the less ready to labor for them on all necessary occasions.

Resolved, That a State Convention of three from each Judicial District be appointed to further the objects of this Convention.

The resolutions were received with loud and enthusiastic applause, and, at the mention of the nominees, the Convention rose and gave nine hearty cheers.

Mr. HAYNES moved the adoption of the report and resolutions.

The motion was seconded. Before the question was put Mr. SMITH said he could not refrain on this occasion from expressing the heartfelt congratulations he experienced in the announcement of the principles contained in the report and resolutions just read. This was what he had been waiting for anxiously during the last eight years. This reinstated the Democracy of New-York in the position which it occupied in 1848, but from which it was driven by events that occurred during the following year. He believed the Radical Democracy of New-York to-day stood in the pass of Thermopylæ; though like the band of heroes who made that locality consecrated ground, their numbers might be not small, yet if they exercise more patience and courage they would keep at bay the multitudes whom the Satraps may bring on to spread Slavery in the Territories. Let them take such a stand as would recall the idea of the motto of the State, Excelsior, onward, higher and higher in the march of freedom and right. [Loud applause.]

The question on the adoption of the report and resolutions was put and carried, amid loud applause.

Gen. WELCH—I am not satisfied, Mr. Chairman, with this adoption of the resolutions; it being the first address and this the first series of resolutions issued since 1848, that our constituents could approve, I suggest to the Convention that we reaffirm and readopt, standing, and with three cheers.

The suggestion was instantly complied with, and the response elicited was enthusiastic in the extreme.

Mr. TOWNSEND rose and stated that a gentleman desired him to say to the Convention, that if the Convention would publish its proceedings, and issue in pamphlet form 20,000 copies, to be sent as an expression of the true Democracy of New-York, to the people of Pennsylvania, he would give twenty dollars towards paying the expenses. The gentleman making the offer was Mr. SAMUEL GREEN, of Syracuse.

Mr. TOWNSEND embodied the suggestion to print 20,000 copies in a resolution and announced another contribution for $20, also.

Mr. FOSTER moved as an amendment to have the documents printed generally for the use of the Convention.

Mr. GEORGE SAUL, editor of a German paper, rose and moved as amendment to that that 10,000 copies be printed in the German language. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TOWNSEND accepted the amendment.

Mr. FIELD did not think it advisable to make this Convention assume the character of a propaganda in other States. The Democratic Party had resolved itself into a society for the diffusion of Slavery, and their example was a bad one.

In the course of some remarks that followed, a delegate asked if it would not be well to ascertain the cost of printing the pamphlet.

Mr. W. S. EARL, of Rensselaer—Never mind the cost. I will give $500 to begin with. [Applause.]

Judge HOUNSOUR, being loudly called for, arose and said he had been very unexpectedly called upon to say a few words to this Convention. In all the Conventions he had previously attended he had invariably spoken as little as possible, on the ground that he considered it right to reserve whatever powers God had given him for home consumption. He represented in part the County of Columbia; and, whilst the name of VAN BUREN was still dear to them, the core of Columbia was still sound as it was in 1848. There was a spirit abroad that was tending to destroy the prestige of, dry, effete associations of organizations which were only calculated to meet temporary exigencies. The only permanent and just organization was the organization founded in nature—the organization established by God—the organization of truth and justice. Obedient to that organization they would arrange themselves on the side of Freedom—of free speech, free soil and FREMONT.—[Applause]—and in the struggle for the success of that cause he had no hesitation in pledging Columbia County for five hundred. The speaker alluded, in conclusion, to the betrayal of principle manifested by the supporters of the Pro-Slavery extension measures, and the disappointment experienced with which the people learned that betrayal, and to the indignant resolution with which they had now risen to punish the betrayers.

Mr. HENRY H. VAN DYCK said that though he had advocated democratic doctrines for the last twenty-five years, he was not conscious of any particular merit in doing so. In the exercise of a deliberate judgment he had become a Democrat, and from a sense of what was due to his country he had advocated them. On the 16th of January he was delegate to a so-called Democratic Convention held at that place. Propositions and resolutions at that time were presented which he could not conscientiously agree to, and like an honest man he expressed his disagreement with them. Then there were but few [illegible] with him, but now he was [illegible] surrounded by a host of those association he was proud, and [illegible] he could rely, and although many [illegible] that Convention of the 16th of [illegible] and they agreed with him [illegible] that for the sake of minister ob[illegible] Yet he was not to be influenced by any such motives. And what had he gained by that? They were recognized as National Democrats for a period of five months. They were admitted into the national party at Cincinnati, but medical books informed us that a five months' child could never live. [Laughter.] They were even informed in that Convention at Cincinnati, that if they had presented themselves for admission with their resolutions of ninety months before the full period of gestation they would certainly have been aborted. [Renewed laughter.] Whilst in the force he can around him he felt as though he was walking on eggs. He felt as though the Albany Atlas before it had a dead body bound to it. [Laughter.] He was happy to congratulate them that they were once more free to act, free to act, and if necessary, to suffer. He was free to confess that there were some voices, that so far as their side of the question was concerned, were silenced—their voices had not only become silent, but perverted. He had read of old of one who took the talent with which Providence had endowed him, and buried it in the earth—and he had heard of people now, who took the talents that had been given them, and wrapped them in the windings-sheet of the Administration, and buried them under the interments of the Cincinnati Convention. He had his doubts, and offered a premium of $500 for ten Youth, for the privilege of making himself independently, but he was responsible to his country and he (the speaker) would have his share if he had any. He was content to say, in the language of the inspired volume, that to so far as those politicians are concerned, that he turned into their stockings to the true prophet, "The dog has returned to his vomit, and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire." I believe, said he, in conclusion, that the issue which is before you is all-important, and that we are responsible for the result to God as correspondent to mankind. I believe that the way to commit the fidelity to do right, and I believe that this agitation is right. I hold that each man should discharge his duty honestly and conscientiously, and leave the consequence where it ought properly to be left.

After repeated calls Mr. LAWRENCE, of Oneida, presented himself and said he had heard reminiscences about the past. He considered that they were entering upon the future, to look at what they had to do rather than what they had done. They were the true representatives of the Democracy of New-York. He admitted that other men may have been and honestly Democratic in their political conduct as he, but when they turned round and their power to the extension of Slavery in the Territories, he thought he said he must follow them?. He never meant to interfere with Slavery where it is although he always believed Slavery to be bad. But he felt it his imperative duty to oppose its spread, and in this he was the duty of them all to go home and organize all who were opposed to the present Administration. In this great struggle they went to work knowing that FREMONT and DAYTON would be elected. Their object then was to bring all the people into agreement with them so as to render the popular will unmistakable. He had no fear of a disunion in the event of Mr. FREMONT's election. A weak Administration like the existing one was more calculated to produce disunion than a Government administered by a man of firmness and integrity. For what was the cause of weakness? and if Mr. BUCHANAN were elected he would propounded that weakness, and his Administration would be marked by measures that the whole country would regret. If he carried out the principles of the Cincinnati Platform, he would be taxing every citizen to emancipate Cuba, or if he preferred to follow up the principles of the Ostend Conference, he would seize it by force. It was his policy, it would seem, to extend a sort of Republican protectorate over the world, to be sustained on the principle of introducing Slavery first, and then leaving freedom to take care of itself.

Mr. WARD HUNT, of Oneida, reviewed the previous National Conventions which he characterized as Anti-Democratic and claimed for this Convention the merit of being the true representative of the New-York Democracy. They were here to meet the Ostend manifesto and the Cincinnati platform, which was based on the principle of Slavery extension. It had been charged that the Fremont Party was not national. Now New-York was large enough for him; but he was convinced that FREMONT had thousands of friends south of the Potomac, though the votes in his favor cheerily might not be in proportion to the number of his friends. The slave-holders ruled with a rod of iron, and every one knew that the man who ventured to express liberal sentiments would be served as poor Underwood was in Virginia. For himself he would support FREMONT and DAYTON with all the energy in his power, and felt satisfied that five-fifths of his County would be found in his favor.

Mr. MARVIN TOWNSEND made an excellent speech, in the course of which he reviewed the conduct of Mr. VAN BUREN, and expressed his regret that he had disowned the platform on which he had stood in 1848. It should be remembered, however, that Mr. VAN BUREN did not lead the people in 1848. He was merely carried along by them, and would be certainly left behind in 1856. The young Jesse VAN BUREN and his father and Deerfield there, they had gained multitudes of new, earnest and honest friends. If JOHN VAN BUREN had only taken care of himself, he would have been the Republican candidate and next President of the United States. But he had chosen to sell himself to the party who had made murder a party question, who refused almost to a man to vote for investigation into the murder by HAMMONS of poor KRAUTH, an Irishman, and who were supported by every motion to extend Slavery into the Territories. Of the opponents of Mr. FREMONT, he would merely say that Mr. BUCHANAN proposes to do injustice to white men born at the North and to black men born at the South, while MILLARD FILLMORE proposed to do still greater injustice, for he had placed himself at the head of a party for the purpose of doing gross wrong to men of every clime.

Mr. SEARDOR, Mr. FURMAN and Mr. FLOYD were severally called on and addressed the Convention in turn, each strongly asserting his belief in the success of the party, and his concurrence in the action of the Convention.

Mr. VAN DYCK moved that a Committee of three be appointed to superintend the publication of the address and resolutions, and to receive the contributions that may be handed in for that purpose.

The Chair appointed as such Committee, H. H. VAN DYCK, E. E. CARRIE, and F. J. FYFMAN.

The President then announced the following Committee appointed under the sixth resolution:

Bangor—R. D. Field, J. J. Coddington, and J. H. Titus.

Utica—

1—S. Denison, J. G. Floyd, and F. S. Crooks.
2—T. J. Hoppaugh, Ira Porter, and J. A. Hillard.
4—Platt Potter, J. F. Sherrill, and W. Chapin.
5—J. Wooster, Ward Hunt, and S. Green.
6—W. M. Greig, J. H. Selkrey, and W. G. Welch.
7—B. Campbell, J. Godfrey, and H. R. Selden.
8—F. H. Stevens, H. J. Slakies, and M. Grever.

Mr. DAVIS moved that the name of the President be added to the Committee. [Adopted.

On motion of BENJAMIN WELCH, Jr., the thanks of the Convention were tendered to the President for the able manner in which he had performed the duties of the Chair, and then the Convention adjourned sine die.

Public Meeting.

After the adjournment of the Convention a public meeting was held at Market Hall, at which several excellent speeches were made—Mr. LE ROY MORGAN presiding.

Mr. D. DUDLEY FIELD was the principal speaker. He began by alluding to the results of the Convention and to the character of its candidate for the Presidency. In alluding to Col. FREMONT's inscription of the cross on the Rocky Mountains, he said: "Protestant as I am, and Protestant as he was, I honor him for having planted that great symbol of religion and civilization on that mighty rock of God." But there were greater issues here than those presented in the candidates personally. What, he would ask, was this Convention made of? There were no shoulder-hitters here—no RUFFIANS with their Kettle guns here making noise to endanger the Democracy as if they had no reason and were all dare. There were no office-holders, so far as he knew; but they were men from the people. Mr. FIELD adverted to the efforts of the South to make this, not a free Republic, but a Slave Republic, and, in the course of his remarks in this connection, stated that the repeal of the Missouri Compromise had been effected under pretence of following out the principle that the people shall govern themselves, when in fact, it was got up for the purpose of putting Slavery there. Two men, President FILLMORE and F. A. DEMOCRAT—both equally intent on having the nomination for the Presidency, and the former of whom had proved himself thereby a traitor to the principles of Freedom, a traitor to his office, a traitor to his country, a traitor to posterity. Mr. FIELD then reviewed the progress of Legislation in regard to Kansas. It was argued by the South, he said, that the Constitution allowed every citizen to go into any Territory of the Union with his property; and did not Congress protect the South in her property? Did not Congress forbid the importation of gunpowder and obscene prints? And if the people of Utah, where polygamy exists, passed a law by which any man's ten wives, or more, should become his property, could not Congress forbid him from bringing that property into the Territory? If Mr. BUCHANAN were elected, he (the speaker) saw no reason why a movement should not be initiated and prosecuted in his time to do away with the prohibition against the Slave-trade, as being an injury to the South. We must have this Republic, which our fathers founded, a free Republic. The danger is imminent, however, and this cannot be accomplished without working for it.

Mr. COGSWELL, of Albany, and several other speakers, addressed the meeting, which adjourned after 10 o'clock.

Meeting of the Whig State Central Committee.

CALL FOR A STATE CONVENTION—DECLARATION IN FAVOR OF FILLMORE.

ALBANY, Thursday, July 24.

The Whig State Central Committee met to-day in this city, and adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the Committee, the views entertained by Whigs of other States as to the propriety of assembling a National Convention to take such action in reference to candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States as will best sustain and carry out the principles of the Union, and to calculated to restore the country to its former peace and harmony, meet our entire approbation, and that we invite the Whigs of the several counties of the State to a Convention, at Albany, on the 14th of August, to select delegates to the National Convention, to be held at Baltimore on the third Wednesday of September.

Resolved, As individuals, that in MILLARD FILLMORE we have a candidate who possesses those qualities which are necessary for an efficient administration of the Government, and therefore that we respectfully but earnestly commend him to the favorable consideration of the Convention.

The Free Academy.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

While public attention is directed towards the Free Academy, on account of its recent Commencement, I take the liberty of bringing into notice, through your paper, the following fact, in every thing that concerns Freedom in this City, is every thing that one Freedom is made a study, and the marks obtained by each student in that department are carried into the lodge, and are counted in ascertaining his position on the merit-roll, and in the distribution of several medals. Now, it is a well-known fact that many of the best students are the poorest drawers, and vice versa. I have reliable information that one student of the Academy would have received the first Full Medal for general proficiency, had he not been a poor draughtsman. Is this fair? Or right? Should a good scholar be deprived of his high station on the Merit Roll, and of the medals merely because Nature has not endowed him with a sufficiently firm hand?

Of course it is fair. Firm hands, fine visions, sound bodies, and some minds, are essential to the best scholars out of the Academy, and why not in it?

MR. FILLMORE'S FRIENDS AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Large and Enthusiastic Meeting.

STRENGTH AND GOOD MUSIC.

The people of the City of New-York, in common with their brethren throughout the Union, have a fondness for art, and whenever an occasion occurs on which they can gratify their commendable desire to behold a statue formed by a master mind, or an architectually beautiful edifice, without expending what is needed for the necessities or comforts of life, they are sure to be present in large numbers. Such was the case last evening. The Academy of Music is a building concerning which there has been much curiosity—particularly the interior, which is well worth a leisure hour. But unfortunately, for the masses, but few public and free meetings have been holden there, and therefore thousands of those who desired to visit and examine it, have been prevented by the importance of the sum charged for admittance. The necessities of the Pro-Slavery American interest required that the public desire to see the building should be gratified, and consequently they held their meeting there. They could not have been disappointed in the attendance, for the Academy was crowded, and there were many who contented themselves with an outside view, where they were entertained by several speakers. The principal speaking, however, was inside.

Soon after 8 o'clock the band, which had been performing on the balcony, came in and occupied the orchestra boxes, and Chickering Dposer came forward upon the stage, which was ornamented with the banners of the various Fillmore and Donelson Clubs, and read the following

CALL:

☞ The Friends of Fillmore Coming to the Rescue.—A call for a public meeting, to be held THIS EVENING, July 24, at 8 o'clock P. All these gentlemen will certainly be present.

When he had finished reading, he proposed for President of the meeting HIRAM KETCHUM, Esq. The proposition was well received; and after Mr. KETCHUM had taken the Chair, other officers were appointed, which made the organization stand as follows:

When all had taken their seats, the President stepped forward and thanked the assembly for the honor conferred; and in addition, remarked that they had congregated in a peculiar time to consider matters of vast importance to the country. They had met as citizens of New-York, to consider and act as became them. For it was important on such an occasion that New-York should stand in the right place, and be found doing the right thing. They were met to express their preference in relation to the candidates for the Presidency; and what was their preference? [Cries of FILLMORE.] The speaker added his voice in favor of Mr. FILLMORE, and then proceeded to give his reasons at length for his preference. He commenced with a review of Mr. FILLMORE's administration. Their candidate, he said, had been called suddenly to fill the Presidential chair, not in a time of tranquility but in a time of trouble; he chose for his Cabinet officers men from the various parts of the country; and they were all Americans. [Applause.] And, gentlemen, said the speaker, who did he appoint to superintend our Foreign relations? ["FILLMORE," cried many voices. "Three cheers for MILLARD FILLMORE."] And they were given. Here the speaker was interrupted by the entry of several clubs, with banners and music. Among them was the following, on blue cloth:

ASHLANDERS.

"Palmam qui meruit ferat."

When the music and cheers had ceased the speaker continued his review; claiming, as before that MILLARD FILLMORE had, and, if elected again, would execute the laws of the country, and here he, the speaker, would give notice by all who were inclined to invade countries with which we are at peace, by filibustering or otherwise, not to vote for MILLARD FILLMORE for the Presidency. The speaker then passed to consider the position of his candidate on the slavery question. On this he would say, although he was not authorized to say it, that he had favored the Missouri Compromise, and he, the speaker, believed that if MILLARD FILLMORE had been President during the last four years, that Compromise would not have been repealed.

Some one in the of the house body here remarked that MILLARD FILLMORE ought not to be made President, whereupon there was great disturbance, and cries of put him out.

"Finally order was restored, and the speaker proceeded to defend the act of Mr. FILLMORE—that of signing the "Fugitive Slave bill;" and he claimed that if he had not signed it he would have deserved impeachment! After some remarks complimenting Hon. BENJAMIN BIRCHARD for his opposition to Archbishop HUGHES, and urging them to vote for MILLARD FILLMORE, he closed with asking "Shall we make JOHN C. FREMONT the standard bearer of Freedom?" To which several in the audience answered "No, no—he's a 'Black Republican.'"

When the President had resumed his seat, Hon. WILLIAM G. DAVIS, of Maryland, came forward and asked whether there was any good reason why MILLARD FILLMORE should withdraw from the contest; and, without waiting for an answer, he added, that there was surely nothing in the name of JAMES BUCHANAN to frighten him from the contest. JAMES BUCHANAN was, he said, the candidate of a portion of the Free Soilers of the North, and the Secessionists of the South, who met at BARNUM's Hotel in 1848, and, connecting, produced a hybrid too monstrous to be able to perpetuate its species.

At this point, Councilman MERRITT made a fearful leap from the stage down into the orchestra box,

AMERICAN STATE CONVENTION AT BOSTON—THE MOST DESPERATE IN THE MAJORITY—PARTIES TO ORGANIZE.

BOSTON, Thursday, July 24.

The American State Convention for the nomination of Governor and other State officers, met at Faneuil Hall, to-day, at 12 o'clock. The [illegible] of delegates is quite large.

Moses G. Ooms called the Convention to order, and after a few remarks, called for a nomination of a temporary Chairman.

Great confusion ensued, in which the names of Mr. FARWELL, of Boston; Mr. FURMAN, of Lowell; Mr. COOK, of Pittsfield, and others, were heard.

The Chair stated that he first heard the name of Mr. FARWELL, and put it, when the Noes were loudest, and he decided the motion lost.

A count was then called for and the vote taken by rising, when the Chair said he had voted to sustain the nomination of Mr. FARWELL and did not propose to.

The result was claimed as a victory by the Fremont men, and they loudly cheered, while the Fillmore men hissed and called for a division of the House.

Mr. FARWELL was finally elected temporary Chairman.

The Committee on Credentials reported that [illegible] represented by 131 delegates. The Fillmore men, who had anticipated a majority, finding themselves outnumbered by the Fremont Party, insisted upon a thorough sifting of the whole delegation, and the contested seats, amounting to 40. The question of the contested seats led to a warm debate, which with other matters relating to a permanent organization occupied the entire afternoon, and up to this hour the Convention has not organized.

The Convention is still unorganized. The Fillmore men occupied the side of the hall, the Fremont men the other, and were nearly balanced in numbers.

General good nature was maintained and the repeated threats of the temporary Chairman, Mr. FARWELL, (Fremont,) to call the police to preserve order, has so far had the desired quieting effect.

At present it is impossible to say when the Convention will be permanently organized.

CROSSING THE SEA.

NUMBER ONE.

[illegible] Sunday, June [illegible]

[illegible] Well, we are often as you may think of us over the country you call home, but we have been benumbed to feelings, childhood, and you can never avoid a certain feeling of depression, a certain heavy [illegible] and moisture of the eyes, when [illegible] vanished below the horizon, or [illegible] It is not heavy that we men who have [illegible] often, will deep it.

There were a hundred and eighty passengers on the deck of the ship as she disembarked upon which I [illegible] myself from Boston to Liverpool, and [illegible] a motley crowd from all countries and [illegible] Germans, Spaniards, Portuguese, [illegible] Americans, Indian, and I don't know what heathen and Turkish nations besides, represented by men, women and children, in all [illegible] dresses and costumes. We were in [illegible] some bright, some sad, some boisterous, some, like ourselves, parting with all home attachments for long travel in foreign lands.

And so the sea came up around us, and the land went down, and all was with us as it has been with us and others a thousand times before, to become on the sea, and yet, though it was the thousandth time, it was, as I have said already, as sad as ever, and we were quiet, still, silent, looking in each other's faces more than usually, while the ship went on into the night that lay away towards Old England.

I know that the incidents of a sea voyage are very common place to you and many your readers, and yet in all my newspaper reading I have never met with a sketch of life on a steamer from America to Liverpool. The chief incidents of a voyage have of course been served up a hundred times, but the daily routine I have not seen described.

It is simple enough, and a few lines tell it all. Breakfast at 8½ o'clock, at which we have a table loaded with all manner of eatables. Lunch at 12, consisting of soup and cold meats; dinner at 4, and a slaughterous dinner, too at 6½, and supper at 10, of any dish you choose to order, from a beef steak to a slice of a whale. The larder is inexhaustible, and the appetites of the passengers improve with the profusion before them. Sea appetites are proverbial, and eating occupies two-thirds of the time on the voyage. The day passes quickly. Time nowhere else has such wings. From cabin to deck and deck to table is the regular routine, and the interval between meals is passed in lounging about the ship, smoking cigars near the smoke stack of the steamer, and walking with the ladies up and down the saloon deck.

We have had one of the pleasantest runs on record. Although we did not make a great run on any one day, we made such regular time each day that our passage was remarkably short.

This much by way of general remark. And now to commence what I propose to be a series of sketches of personal adventures. Let me introduce "us and ours" to you. We are a party of four—two gentlemen and two ladies—who have left America for foreign travel. Where our route is to be, and where you will hear of us, it is impossible to tell you. Yesterday we were in Liverpool, and thought that we should be in London to-day, but, instead of that, we are at an old inn in the old town of Chester, seated around a table in a small sitting room, whence I write these lines. So it may be to-morrow. We have no plan, no fixed route—only this, that before we again tread the beloved land of our own land, we shall have bathed our tired limbs in Jordan, and cooled our foreheads with the last breezes that come down from Hermon.

Even in this we may be disappointed, and the future is dim before us. We are traveling by the day, only. Ask nothing then of our future. Be content to hear of us as we go along.

We had capital rooms on the Asia—and with such a steamer and such a captain, who could fail to be comfortable? We found Capt. Lott a gentleman of rare qualities—companionable, intelligent, accomplished—as well on matters of general interest as in his own profession; and we shall be long forgetting, or long remembering, those pleasant talks about the smoke-stack, or the after-dinner discussions over the fruits and nuts. I commend to all my friends my steamer which he commands.

I was constantly quoting to the ladies that memorable passage in which the incidents of a sea-voyage are so graphically and "summarily comprehended:"

> "Sometimes we see a ship
> And sometimes ship a sea."

And although we did, from time to time, see the ship, we did not for many days ship the sea. We had splendid weather, only that after leaving Halifax we had dense fog, and running up Cape Race we shuddered as we looked over the rail at the black water under the murky air and recalled the terrible scene of last Autumn. We could see familiar faces looking up at us out of the deep sea. We could hear voices that we knew well, calling out of the depths, and we bowed our heads on our mantle and shut out the view. The morning after that was clear, and a fresh breeze gladdened us. No one on board was sea sick, and no one was absent at meal time. So it continued for just a week.

On Thursday we woke with a heavy sea on, and the controlling and pitching the ship terribly. It was blowing a gale from the northeast squally, too, at that, and the ship was plunging into it. About every third wave went over the forecastle in a shower of spray, and the decks were flooded from stem to stern. No ladies came on deck, and but twenty-seven passengers were at the breakfast table. I had been on the sea in pretty much every sort of craft except a large steamer, and I was glad of the opportunity to try the powers of my own stomach. I confess that it was hard work. I kept on the safe side, however, by eschewing any meal but breakfast, and had, therefore, opportunity to observe the way he treated the other passengers. About 11 A. M. I was sitting up to the windward of the smoke stack, smoking and talking with Captain Lott, who stood facing me, when suddenly she rolled heavily, and I heard the Captain utter an ejaculation, and saw the twinkling of his boots as he darted—literally darted—over to leeward of the pipe, and the next instant the sea came over us. Water below and white spray above, it came in fore and aft from stem to stern, and the ship shook and quivered, and rushed on and on as before. It was grand to see her steady motion; to watch that seemingly everlasting plunge of the engine, heed less of one or storm. The magnanimous Captain had escaped a wetting, by favor of the lee he had made, but I—well I was rather wet, on reflection, I should say quite wet. After about fifty buckets of water in the shape of spray had gone over me, you may imagine I was not perfectly dry. But that was not the worst of it. I rushed below to see if the ladies had been frightened. Not a bit of it. They had too much to do. The deadlights had been left open, and the sea had gone down into the saloon, and if you ever saw thirty state-rooms Boot you may imagine the appearance presented as I went down the gangway and found myself standing in six inches of water, that rushed and dashed now to windward, and now to leeward as she rolled, while a dozen waiters vainly sought to catch a few drops of it in pans and buckets, and thirty spectatorial voices, from as many rooms, were shouting "steward, steward, water, fire, help, mr.

ry," and thirty voices in the female key were adding to the confusion by their various sounds of fright or fun. Making my way over three live English babies and some five dolls that were dashing up the passage-way in company, and [illegible] escaping a collision with a half-dressed female lady [illegible] I reached my stateroom [illegible] and I tumbled [illegible] floor to my own [illegible]

We had our share of the fun. Such a picture! My trowsers slippers were dashing about [illegible] in the centre, now separating, now dashing frantically together. I actually stopped to laugh at their ridiculous appearance. But a heavy French trunk was in a tremendous state of excitement, and that looked alarming. Three claret bottles and a hair brush were having a coalition to themselves in a corner, and a grand medley of small stores were astride everywhere, while in the midst of all lay [illegible] her side, shrieking with uncontrollable laughter (in the cabin range again. On the whole, it was worth disappointing, but I didn't see any practical way of doing it, so, I took to bailing, and amused myself by filling my washbowls with the water, and emptying them on the floor again as fast as I filled them. However, we gained a little on it in time, and at length had all in tight and right. [illegible] Who said this day been sea-sick for the first time, and had been roused from its depressing stupor to laugh at the "shipping of a sea," now repeated my old quotation to me, and then speculated something about "returning, as the dog in Scripture, to his former occupation," and I left her on the sofa, as ——— expressed it, "with a very painful—an exceedingly troublesome cough." THE BROOKS AFFAIR.

Examination of the Controversy Between Mr. Brooks and Mr. Burlingame.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The Card published by Mr. BROOKS in apology for his retirement from his contemplated challenge of Mr. BURLINGAME, is a remarkable document, full of unmanly insinuendo, and of evident misrepresentation or unfair coloring of conversations had between the latter gentleman and friends of the former. Of the style of the document it is sufficient to say that, like his recent speech in the House of Representatives on the occasion of his expulsion, it is totally inconsistent with the character of a high-toned gentleman, and much more befitting the uneducated porter-house bully than an individual of Mr. BROOKS' attainments and social position. Such I believe will be the judgment of the North, and of the South, as well as of all right thinking persons everywhere.

I propose briefly to notice some of the points of fact or inference in the card, which do injustice to Mr. BURLINGAME, and to expose their fallacy or wrong. Mr. BROOKS begins by stating that he apprehended arrest from the officious interference of Mr. BURLINGAME's friends. The answer to this insinuendo is that Mr. BURLINGAME put himself at once beyond the reach of such interference, and has not been arrested, while Mr. BROOKS is himself in the hands of the law.

The latter next attempts an imputation upon Mr. BURLINGAME's courage, by suggesting that he submitted to an insult from Mr. KEITT. The answer is, that every gentleman who recognizes the "code of honor," will, in his heart of hearts, condemn this attempt of Mr. BROOKS to fling his friend KEITT into his own quarrel as utterly inexcusable, and absolutely indecent; also, that so long as Mr. BURLINGAME stands ready to meet Mr. BROOKS upon "the code," the latter, above all other men, is debarred from any right to prescribe other rules for his conduct; and finally, that as Mr. BURLINGAME prefers a chance for his life in the duel to the alternative of assassination which Mr. BROOKS presents him, that fact in no degree devolves upon him the necessity of swallowing the barbarous code of the duelist and becoming a challenger to mortal combat. Nay more, we hope he has the moral courage to refuse to fall into the trap which such men as Mr. BROOKS cunningly lay for unwary feet, that he will not let them succeed in putting him in a position where they, thirsting for his blood, may murder him without risk to themselves. Mr. BROOKS whining because Mr. BURLINGAME won't adopt the rule that he lays down for him, and be shot for his accommodation, just as he desires, is in shocking bad taste, and will deceive nobody.

The next insinuation is, that Mr. BURLINGAME was countenancing out-door boasting of his skill with the rifle, and of his triumph over BROOKS. Nobody who knows that gentleman,—not even Mr. BROOKS himself—believes the vile slander. It is one of those suspicions which can find harbor room only in mean and narrow minds. But these rumors convinced BROOKS that "forbearance was no longer a virtue." Magnanimous BROOKS! What Christian forbearance! He who "stole into the Senate Chamber, and smote him (Senator SUMNER) as Cain smote his brother;" he who publicly confesses that he used a cane in his assault, for fear that his contemplated victim might prove the strongest, unless he disabled him at once, and that in such an event he would have taken his victim's life; he who thus unblushingly confesses his fear of personal consequences, and who thus illustrates his "forbearance," could stand it no longer. His "forbearance" had enabled him for days to submit to the denunciation of his act which Mr. BURLINGAME had pronounced—but, now he must have "satisfaction." He sent to Mr. BURLINGAME to know whether he would receive a call from him, the result of which he honorably (?) gives to the public, in a confessedly mutilated account of a private interview, in which Mr. BURLINGAME is made to admit that Mr. BROOKS is a man of courage and honor—to say that in his speech he did not reflect upon the personal character of the South Carolina representative, and to offer his blood, if desired, in atonement for any injury Mr. BROOKS conceived that he had suffered at his hands.

There is no pretence here that Mr. BURLINGAME modified or retracted one word of what he had said in his speech. His failure to retract was a positive reaffirmation of his language, which even a private admission that he believed Mr. BROOKS to be a gentleman, and that his assault upon Mr. SUMNER was highly honorable to him, could in no essential degree have modified before the world. Yet Mr. BROOKS admits that he was satisfied with it. But ten days afterwards—not a word of all this having been known outside the parties to the meeting—Mr. BROOKS suddenly finds that he "must have an apologies from Mr. BURLINGAME." It strikes us that according to "the code" the matter had been entirely closed once. Mr. BURLINGAME, however, appears to have promptly reopened it for the benefit of South Carolina, and the consequence was the agreement upon the memorandum which Mr. BROOKS appended to his speech. This Mr. BROOKS concluded to accept. He was told it was "magnanimous" to do so—and he probably thought it another triumph of his "forbearance." He accepted it to "save Mr. BURLINGAME's feelings." I venture to assert that Mr. BURLINGAME and his friends will repudiate any right of Mr. BROOKS to claim these virtues in his acceptance. Who believed that the man who assassinated SUMNER, and who made the speech uttered upon the floor of the House a few days since by PRESTON S. BROOKS, would ever have accepted such a memorandum as the settlement of the personal difficulty, if he had not become satisfied that there was no alternative but its acceptance, a back-out on his own part, or a fight? The idea is preposterous.

But Mr. BROOKS says this memorandum "contained apologies." Where are they? In what sentence do they consist? BROOKS knows better. If BURLINGAME had yielded at all he would never have consented to take from him one hair less than a retraction, or a withdrawal of his language in terms. The Herald of Monday last contains a statement authorized by Mr. BROOKS, or his friend BOCOCK or BOYCE, in which it is expressed that that Mr. [illegible] modification of his speech or [illegible] asked to [illegible] in the same paper [illegible] are that every effort to humbug or to drive Mr. BURLINGAME into a modification or retraction has signally failed.

And now comes the grand plea upon which Mr. BROOKS avoids the issue himself had made with a man whom he has found to be as courageous and cool as he is determined and unyielding. He complains that he is asked to go to Canada—"a distance of nine seven hundred miles, by the mail route." The italics are his own. How anxious is Mr. BROOKS to avail himself of all the unimportant crimes which may seem to add strength to his apology. "Nine seven hundred miles by the mail route!" But there is a much shorter route than the "mail route," just as available, and which Mr. BROOKS would doubtless select if he was about to visit the Falls on a pleasure excursion. How childish to avail himself of such a quibble! He assumes that the route to Canada lies "through the enemy's country,"—that is to say, Maryland and Pennsylvania chiefly,—the former a Slave State, and the latter the State which we are assured is to cast fifty thousand majority for Mr. BROOKS' candidate for the Presidency. But he can't go through without "running the gauntlet of mobs and assassins, prisons and penitentiaries, bailiffs and constables!" He "could never get to Canada," and were he to do so and Mr. BURLINGAME to fall, he (Mr. BROOKS) "could never get back!"

Here again we see the workings of that cautious temperament which decided Mr. BROOKS to assassinate Mr. SUMNER with a bludgeon instead of attempting to "punish" him with a cowhide. He certainly is a brilliant illustration of the maxim that "discretion is the better part of valor." Every Northern man will laugh at Mr. BROOKS' fears. They are the gibbering phantoms of his own guilt-stricken soul. Mobs and assassins! Who were to bring them upon him? Who to point him out for their attack? Would it be necessary for him to proclaim it in his path that he was on his way to Canada to attempt again the murder of a son of Massachusetts? He certainly was in no danger of being betrayed by Mr. BURLINGAME for his most intimate confidential friends had not the slightest intimation whither he had gone until they learned it from Mr. BROOKS himself, or his friend, Col. LAMB. As to fears of prisons and penitentiaries within the States, that is all gammon; for had Mr. BURLINGAME fallen by the hand of Mr. BROOKS, on the soil of Canada, no Federal law, nor any law of any State of the Union, would have been violated. It may be answered that the British law in Canada is severer than our own. Well, that is as fair for one as the other.—Mr. BURLINGAME braves it—why should Mr. BROOKS hesitate? Besides, neither party would proclaim their purpose. How, then, could they be arrested in Canada? The overt act they could arrange so as to have unwitnessed except by implicated parties; and of course no prosecution could be maintained under such circumstances.

If Mr. BROOKS pleads that he would be unsupported by any Southern friends in Canada, it may be answered that the Clifton House, Niagara Falls, never fails, at this season, to be more than half full of Southerners. It was Mr. BURLINGAME's right to name the place of meeting, and he named the nearest neutral ground. As Mr. BROOKS pleads his fear of personal consequences, Mr. BURLINGAME's friends may, with propriety, ask how he could safely fight on the soil of Virginia, whose citizens are banished by a "mob" for daring to participate in a Republican Convention? suppose Mr. BROOKS had fallen there by his hand, where is the guarantee of Mr. BURLINGAME's immunity? The lofty superiority which the South assumes will probably be put in answer; but it will be declined as insufficient, for it has been tried and proven false. From the beginning to the end, Mr. BROOKS' card is a stinging satire on modern "chivalry," and the "code of honor." It has failed to cast a shade of suspicion on the honor, the firmness, the courage or the true chivalry of the noble son of Massachusetts, who has so fearlessly thrown himself into the breach.

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

Letter from Gov. Robinson to Col. Sumner upon the State of Affairs in Kansas.

CAMP OF U. S. CAVALRY, NEAR LECOMPTON, KANSAS, Monday, July 7, 1856.

COL. E. V. SUMNER: Dear Sir—In my conversation with you on the 5th inst., relative to the outrage at Topeka on the 4th, and the general partisan character of the General Government, I intended to cast no reflection or censure upon yourself as an officer under orders. On the contrary, I have reason to believe that, in this last act of the tragedy, as in all others, you have strictly obeyed the orders of your superior, the Commander-in-Chief, and could not have done otherwise unless you had acted either against orders or without them, or have resigned your commission.

Whatever judgment the people of Kansas or the country may pass upon the conduct of the administrators of Government, or I should rather say, administrators of outrage, in Kansas, all parties must concede to you, personally, the character of an honorable, impartial, high-minded and efficient officer; notwithstanding, in the discharge of your official duty, your superiors incur the censure of persons of all shades of political faith.

The causes of complaint the people of Kansas have against the President of the United States are many and various.

He has appointed officers, Executive and Judicial, for the Territory, who, with very few exceptions, have countenanced and aided the foreign invasion of the ballot-box, and the foreign mobs, robberies, murders, fire and sword, preying upon the free-soil settlers of Kansas. The President himself refused to interpose for our protection, saying he had no power to act in our behalf. When, however, his Governor refused, for cause, to recognize the body elected by citizens of Missouri, as the Legislature of Kansas, and would have made their enactments a dead letter, the President could find power to act, and removed him on a false charge.

His successor, on his way to the Territory, told the people of Missouri that he would enforce the laws of their Legislature upon the people of Kansas, and from the first has acted either the part of a tool of men in Missouri or a violent partisan.

He avoided the settlers of the Territory, refusing the hospitalities of the citizens, and declining their invitation to address them as he had done the people of Missouri.

Last Fall, when the people of another State wished to destroy Lawrence, the Governor, on a pretence that a difficulty had occurred ten miles south of the devoted city, issued his proclamation for his militia to turn out and encamp over against the town, which had taken no part in any difficulty, and in which no legal process of any kind had been attempted to be served by the Sheriff, and in which no crime had been committed.

But Lawrence was the successful rival of Lecompton, and contained some Free-State men within it, and it must be destroyed, and President PIERCE's Governor must be the instrument of destruction. Finding, however, the public determined to protect themselves from such official or other robbery, and having no legal action against the town or its citizens, he concluded to wait for a more convenient season. Where a two-fold object is to be accomplished, namely, the destruction of a rival town and the crushing out of political opponents, the occasion is not long delayed. The President comes to their aid, (having suddenly learned that he has power to act,) by a special message and proclamation informing the settlers of Kansas, and the rest of mankind, that he indorses the Draconian code of the Legislature, elected by the people of Missouri and its validity, whether legal or not, the army and Navy of the United States are at the command of the several Sheriffs (he employed the necessary to execute these edicts of the Legislature, the most disgraceful intimates that it would not be [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Lawrence, and drive them back from [illegible] they came. They steal and rob in the name of [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Territory, and hold the plunder subject to his order. The President of the United States looks on unmoved, and with means contingent which, were they exerted by a foreign power, would invoke the thunders of war in a war of revenge at once. Even the Governors of other States [illegible] citizens [illegible] of all their [illegible] their property [illegible] in the State of Missouri [illegible] debts and forbearance, with the country [illegible] President [illegible] power of 25,000,000 of people [illegible] the National and State Governments.

They have made the Constitution a dead letter, and the name of Republicanism a reproach; yet the people are unmoved, except to pass occasionally a resolution of indignation, and the President looks complacently on. All this, and more, has been brought about or permitted, directly or indirectly, by the President of the United States, and his appointees; and a once large and respectable party has, by resolution and otherwise, at a late Convention at Cincinnati, indorsed it, and the nominee of that Convention, once an honorable man, has effaced himself with alacrity at the representative and embodiment of this system of outrage, rapine and murder. Under such circumstances can it be say American citizen who loves his country and hates tyranny, be expected to hold my peace?

No! All the threats of all the officials of the Administration, that unless I keep silence I shall be "hung," on the false charge of treason, cannot prevent me from uttering my views and belief respecting their conduct. I may lose my life upon the gallows, for perjury in Kansas is cheap, packed Juries common, and Constitutional rights unknown; but persecution will be very apt to stop at the gallows, and there may be a place beyond, where the wicked cease from troubling, and where there may be leisure to settle accounts with this Administration and its abettors.

Such, dear Sir, are my views touching the state of affairs in Kansas; and that you might more fully understand me, I have thought proper to state them to you; and, as I see no impropriety in permitting my friends in the State to know them, I shall forward a copy of this for perusal. With high esteem for you personally

I am, very respectfully, Yours, C. ROBINSON.

We, the undersigned, assent to the foregoing statement fully, and indorse the same.

The Keating Murder—Second Trial of Herbert.

Upon the conclusion of the testimony in the second trial of HERBERT, Mr. BRADLEY, his counsel, rose and made a proposition to submit the case to the Jury without argument.

Mr. KEY replied that they would argue it.

Mr. BRADLEY asked the Court to instruct the Jury, in substance, as on the former trial, with an additional section.

Mr. WALKER read the former instructions, and gave a verbal description of an additional section, based on evidence of good character, which he announced his intention of reducing to writing and offering to-day.

Mr. PRESTON spoke of the large mass of conflicting evidence, and for the necessity of opportunity to examine this evidence and see what weight it should bear. It was no more than justice to the Government and the accused that it should be gravely and properly considered.

Mr. BRADLEY followed, contending with much earnestness for a speedy trial. It was the first time he had known Government to insist upon arguing the case before the Jury when the prisoner himself relinquished that right. He spoke of the hardship upon the prisoner of being confined this hot weather in a jail already indicted by the Grand Jury, and contended that there was no material new evidence adduced to vary the points of law set down already.

Mr. KEY replied, contending that no injustice to the prisoner was designed by asking an adjournment. It was now the usual time to adjourn. In regard to the proposition to let the case go to the Jury without argument, he could not say what had come within the knowledge of Mr. BRADLEY, but the Court was aware that it has repeatedly happened that the United States has insisted upon arguing a case before the Jury. He proceeded to comment upon what he designated as the "rocket-like instructions," which, at the last trial, had been sent up to the Court before he (the District-Attorney) had a chance even to read them. These instructions had not been submitted at the proper time, viz.: at the close of the evidence, but had been offered after the closing arguments and just as the case was going to the Jury. He expressed the opinion that these instructions would now be modified by the Court.

Mr. PRESTON rose and warmly repudiated any desire to gratify morbid feeling outside of the building, as ascribated. He was not here for the purpose of pandering to public clamor, a disposition he utterly despised. It has always been the boast of the profession to act upon the motto: Fiat justitia ruat cœlum.

Mr. RATCLIFFE contended that the principles in these instructions have been settled over and over again in these Courts. The instructions are the A B C of the law and never objected to until resisted from a distance.

The Court expressed its willingness to sit longer, but thought it best to adjourn until 10 o'clock to-day; and he was the more willing to do this as the arguments asked to be addressed to the Court were in opposition to the decision of the Court.

SEVENTH DAY.

Shortly after the opening of the Court to-day Mr. KEY submitted to the Court a set of propositions, as follows:

First—If, from the evidence, the Jury believe that, on the day mentioned in the indictment, PHILEMON T. HERBERT, the accused, armed with a pistol or pistols, entered the breakfast-room of Willard's Hotel, and then and there, without provocation, made use of language and acted in a manner ordinarily indicative of a wicked, depraved and malignant spirit; and, within said room, shortly after the use of said language, and the doing of said acts, by means of the pistol or pistols aforesaid, shot to death THOMAS KEATING, who was then and there unarmed, and in the lawful discharge of his duty, such shooting and killing is, in judgment of law, murder.

Second—If, from the evidence, the Jury believe that, on the day mentioned in the indictment, PHILEMON T. HERBERT, the accused, being a guest or boarder at Willard's Hotel, entered the breakfast-room of said hotel for the purpose of obtaining his breakfast; and that, having in a proper and lawful manner ordered said breakfast, the servant to whom he gave said order declined to comply therewith, unnecessarily delayed the execution thereof, or by insolence of manner, words or gestures insulted or provoked said HERBERT; and that, upon such insult or provocation, suddenly, in heat of blood, and under the influence of wrathful passion, by means of a pistol or pistols, which he usually had about his person, said HERBERT shot to death a certain THOMAS KEATING, who then and there, in the opinion of said HERBERT, took part in the insult and provocation aforesaid, and by words and actions manifested a disposition to commit an assault and battery on said HERBERT; such shooting and killing is, in the judgment of law, manslaughter.

Third—If the Jury believe from the evidence that the prisoner at the bar made an assault and battery upon the deceased, and the brother of deceased, PATRICK KEATING, interfered to pacify the prisoner, and to protect the deceased from said assault, and that the prisoner then advanced upon the said PATRICK KEATING with a chair and a loaded pistol, whereupon the said PATRICK KEATING seized the said pistol, and endeavored to wrench it from the grasp of the prisoner, and that deceased then came to the assistance of the said PATRICK KEATING, and that the deceased and PATRICK KEATING and one GARDINER, a friend of the prisoner, then became engaged in a conflict and struggle, and that, the said parties then engaged were separated by one DAVIDSON, and that the said PATRICK KEATING fled, and that the prisoner then seized the deceased by the collar of his coat or [illegible], and shot him with the said pistol, which caused his death; then, in the absence of [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] PATRICK KEATING, interfered to protect the deceased, and the prisoner then advanced upon the said PATRICK KEATING with a deadly weapon, whereupon the said PATRICK KEATING seized the deadly weapon and endeavored to wrench it from the grasp of the prisoner, and that the deceased came to the assistance of the said PATRICK KEATING, and that the deceased and PATRICK KEATING, and one GARDINER, and the prisoner became engaged in a conflict, and [illegible] that the prisoner then [illegible] the deceased, [illegible] the prisoner, in the absence of [illegible] malice, it is manslaughter; notwithstanding, the Jury may believe from the evidence that the prisoner had reasonable grounds to apprehend great bodily injury.

[illegible] retreated without endangering his life, or without receiving great bodily injury by so doing, and did not retreat, but pursued the affray, and took the life of the deceased—then, in the opinion of presiding judge and magistrate, [illegible] manslaughter.

Seventh—If, from the evidence the Jury believe that on the day mentioned in the indictment PHILEMON T. HERBERT, the accused, armed with a pistol or pistols, entered the breakfast-room of Willard's Hotel in the room referred to in the evidence in this cause, made an assault upon THOMAS KEATING with a pistol or pistols, and that out of said assault arose an affray, in which affray the said [illegible] shot and killed the said THOMAS KEATING—that then the accused is not justifiable under the law in making the plea of self-defence.

Some discussion ensued between Messrs. KEY and BRADLEY, as to which side had the right of closing the argument upon these instructions.

The Court thought it made no difference which side closed the argument, as the Court was not likely to be influenced merely by the last word in the controversy.

The Republicanism of Henry Clay.

The Republican Platform is a Henry Clay Platform. In proof of this proposition, we select the following passages from COLTON's "Last Seven Years of the Life of HENRY CLAY:"

"Sir," said Mr. CLAY, "I have said that I never could vote for it; and I repeat that I never can and never will vote for it; and no earthly power shall ever make me vote to plant Slavery where Slavery does not exist."—Page 388.

"And now, Sir," said Mr. CLAY on another occasion, "coming from a slave State as I do, I owe it to myself, I owe it to truth, I owe it to the subject to say, that no earthly power could induce me to vote for a specific measure, for the introduction of Slavery, where it had not before existed, either South or North of that line," [the line of 36° 30'.]—Page 355.

"I shall not enlarge," said Mr. CLAY, "on the opinion which I have already announced to the Senate as being held by me, [to wit: that Slavery had been abolished in Mexico, and consequently did not exist in the territory acquired from Mexico by the United States.] My opinion of the law of Mexico, in all the variety of forms in which legislation can take place—that is to say, by the edict of a Dictator, by the Constitution of the people of Mexico, and by the act of the legislative authority of Mexico—by all these modes of legislation, my opinion is, that Slavery has been abolished there."—Page 364. Again: "I cannot agree to an amendment [of the Territorial bill for New-Mexico] which, in point of fact, assumes that Slavery has an existence there at this time, and which, assumes, in point of law, that, under the Constitution of the United States, there is a right to carry slaves there. I cannot vote for either proposition."—Page 370. Again: "Why," said Mr. CLAY, "these United States consist of thirty States. In fifteen of them there is Slavery, and in fifteen of them Slavery does not exist. Well, how can it be argued that the fifteen Slave States, by the operation of the Constitution of the United States, carry into the ceded Territory their institutions of Slavery, any more than it can be argued, on the other side, that, by the operation of the same Constitution, the fifteen Free States carry into the ceded Territory the principle of Freedom? * * Can you come to any other conclusion than that which I understand to be the conclusion of the public law of the world, of reason, and of justice, that the statutes of law, as it existed in the moment of conquest or acquisition, remains until it is altered by the conquering or acquiring power?"—Page 186. Again: "There are gentlemen," said Mr. CLAY, "who maintain that, by virtue of the Constitution, the right to carry slaves south of that line [36° 30'] already exists. If I had not heard that opinion avowed, I should have regarded it as one of the most extraordinary assumptions and the most indefensible position that was ever taken by man. The Constitution neither created nor does it sanction Slavery. Slavery existed independent of the Constitution, and antecedent to the Constitution; and it was dependent not upon the will of Congress, but upon the laws of the respective States. The Constitution is silent and passive upon the subject of the institution of Slavery; or, rather, it deals with the fact as it exists in the States, without having created it, or continued it, or being responsible for it in the slightest degree. * * If slaves are voluntarily carried into such a jurisdiction, [where Slavery does not exist,] their claims instantly drop if, and they become free, emancipated, liberated from their bondage. * * If the Constitution possesses the paramount authority attributed to it, [that is, to protect Slavery in the Territories,] the laws even of the Free States of the Union would yield to that paramount authority. * * You cannot put your finger on the part of the Constitution which conveys the right or the power to carry slaves from one of the States of the Union to any Territory of the United States."—Page 175. Again: "I cannot agree that under the Constitution of the United States, there is a right to carry slaves into New-Mexico."—Page 190. Again: "And now, Sir, for the first time after the three great acquisitions of Texas, Florida and Louisiana, have been made and have redounded to the benefit of the South—now, for the first time, when three Territories [California, Utah and New-Mexico,] are attempted to be introduced without the institution of Slavery, I put it to the hearts of my countrymen of the South, if it is right to press matters to the disastrous consequences which have been indicated no longer ago than this very morning—even extending to a dissolution of the Union? Mr. President, I cannot believe it."—Page 242.

Once more: "According to the Southern doctrine," said Mr. CLAY, "Congress has no power to intervene upon the subject of Slavery. How, then, can Congress repeal laws which have abolished Slavery, and which create an obstruction to the transportation of slaves into the Territories? If Congress can repeal existing laws, prohibiting Slavery, (such as the Missouri Compromise of 1820,) will not Congress enact laws authorizing the introduction of Slavery, or, if Slavery was existing there, of abolishing Slavery? If that is so, the great principle of non-intervention seems to me to be as totally violated in attempts to repeal local laws, (on this subject, such as the repeal of the Compromise of 1820,) as by imposing or prohibiting Slavery."—Page 267.

We might go on multiplying citations of this kind from the same work, for they are numerous, and given in diversified forms from the great debate on the Compromise of 1850, from which the above are taken. But these are enough to establish our proposition, that the Republican platform is a Henry Clay platform.

A Romantic Story Spoiled.

From the Philadelphia Ledger, July 19.

The Boston Post of the 16th July, 1856, contains a statement which that journal copied from advanced sheets of the forthcoming number of Harper's Magazine for August, purporting to be an account of Mr. BUCHANAN in the days of his early manhood, including certain alleged incidents of an entirely private nature. We have read the story as copied by the able editors of the Post from Harper's Magazine, and we assure them that it is the greatest and most baseless fabrication. Both themselves and the editor of Harper's Magazine have been imposed upon. There never was a more unfounded romance. We forbear pointing out any glorious blunders where all is distorted and wrong; and have only to express the hope that in future such subjects which are necessarily no part of the public concern, and the discussion of which cannot by any possibility affect the existing relations of Mr. BUCHANAN to his countrymen, there will be that manly forbearance which even the most unscrupulous opponent caused always to exhibit. There is nothing in the period of Mr. BUCHANAN's life to which Harper's Magazine alludes which would give such an opponent an advantage if it were made known; and of course there can be nothing in his discussion agreeable to our friends.

From the Boston Post.

The pages of Harper's Magazine containing the article above referred to were forwarded to us, accompanied by a private note, expressing a desire that their contents should be copied into the Post. We oblige the writer, whom we know to be not unmanly, mean, and friendly to Mr. BUCHANAN, we readily yielded to his request without any inquiry as to the propriety of the act, and now only say that we regret we were drawn into any participation in the affair. The conversations of the gentleman in relation to the public proceedings, and of private and delicate events in personal life, they are just, and should serve as an admonition against a course too much indulged in.

[illegible] Poems of Sentiment.

[illegible] A Treatise, of Boston, well known by his [illegible] that the absorbing interest of political reading [illegible] with Humboldt, numerous new works by Kingsley, Mayne Reid, and Charlotte Bronte—new poems by Professor Aytoun, Governess Fanshawe, and R. H. Dimsdale; and new editions (in some instances re-written) of Bayne's Conversations, Dynamics, Essays, Lemon Hart's Poems, Bonnycastle's Sardinia and Stratford, and Matthew Arnold's Poems. A volume of Additional Copyrights, by Dr. Quincy, that in Household Edition of the Waverley Novels are also in the press.

T. B. Peterson, of Philadelphia, has commenced a reprint of Dickens' complete works, (we hope he will not omit the American Notes,) in good paper, with beautiful type, and the whole of the original illustrations by Seymour, "Phiz," and Cruikshank. The Pickwick Papers have already appeared, in two volumes, and are at once handsome and cheap.

In a few months, the Appletons will publish, in one volume large 8vo, the whole Poetical Writings of Mrs. Sigourney L. Lewes, of Brooklyn. Of these poems a considerable portion has already been published, viz.: "Records of the Heart," "The Child of the Sea," and "Myths of the Minstrel." Two of these separate volumes has reached a second and the other a third edition. Mrs. Lewes writes poetry with feeling, enthusiasm, taste, and heart. The volume will be attractive in other respects, as it will contain a number of illustrations, (besides a portrait by Elliott,) finely engraved in the line manner, by Dalziel, Richards, Cheney, Huntington, Durand, H. K. Brown, Smiley, Chappell, and others. This beautiful volume, so rich in spoils won from the kindred realms of Poetry and Painting, will appear in November.

Mazzini Brothers are about publishing another of Abbott's Napoleon volumes. It will contain the correspondence between Napoleon and Josephine, during twenty years, (ending only with Josephine's death in 1814,) with numerous illustrations.

Darley's long-promised Outline Compositions, from Judd's novel of Margaret, are announced, by Rudd & Carleton, as certainly to appear early in November. There will be thirty of these outlines, well engraved by Konrad Huber, and extracts with a synopsis of the story thus richly illustrated, will form the accompanying and suitable letter-press. The public are well acquainted, from his Rip Van Winkle sketches, with Darley's ability in this peculiarly graceful, though difficult, line of illustration, and run no chance of disappointment in this new exercise of his powers.

HISTORY AND REPOSITORY OF PULPIT ELOQUENCE. By Rev. Henry C. Fish. 2 vols. 8vo. New-York: H. W. Dodd.

The plan of this work is excellent. The leading preachers of all times and countries are brought forward, (living divines are excluded,) in local and chronological order, with biographical and critical notices, the best of their pulpit discourses being appended. In this manner a History of Preaching is compiled, which must be interesting and serviceable to lay readers as well as clerical students. The different pulpits thus introduced are: 1. The Greek and Latin; 2. the English; 3. the German; 4. the Irish; 5. the French; 6. the Scottish; 7. the American; and 8. the Welsh. A historical sketch precedes each of these divisions. For the most part the selections are made with judgment. Among the Irish preachers, however, we doubt whether Archbishop Magee and Thomas St. Lawrence ought not have taken the place here occupied by Dean Kirwan and Charles Wolfe. By his appeals for charitable purposes, Kirwan made a great celebrity; but the manner of his delivery, rather than the matter of his discourse, obtained the success. Wolfe, who died young and a cripple, was never distinguished in the pulpit. His reputation arose from his merit as a lyric poet. On the whole, however, the work is well executed, and may be taken as an important addition to religious literature.

THE MECHANICAL PRINCIPLES OF ENGINEERING AND ARCHITECTURE. By Henry Mosseley, with additions by D. H. Mahan, U. S. Military Academy. 1 vol. 8vo. First American from second London edition. New-York: Wiley & Halsted.

Mr. Mosseley, Ex-Professor in King's College, London, has condensed into this volume his lectures on "Engineering and Architecture." Fully master of his subject, he treats it with precision and clearness, and his work has taken a high place, as a standard text-book, in the leading educational institutions of England. The present American edition is an improvement on Mr. Mosseley's, inasmuch as the original text is preserved, with the addition, by Professor Mahan, of an appendix, principally consisting of notes taken by himself, while a pupil at the French Military School at Metz, of lectures delivered by General Poncelet, Professor at the Military Academy there, in 1829. The volume, which is handsomely printed, is enriched with numerous illustrations on wood.

The History of the French Revolution, so often written, will preserve its world-wide interest as long as the Past, with its thrilling incidents and awful lesson, looms darkly on the horizon of the Future. Often as it has been written, by "all sorts and conditions of men," rarely has a correct and condensed account of it—such as a man might make a pocket-companion of, on a day's lounge in the country—been presented. This desideratum was supplied, a few days ago, by F. A. Mignet, Member of the Institute of France, whose book, containing the concentrated essence of almost countless volumes, relates what occurred in France, from the convocation of the States-General in 1789, to the first downfall of Napoleon, in 1814. A good translation of this, with a very good index, has just been issued in Mr. Bohn's Standard Library, a collection of works which may truly be characterized as unique in value and cheapness. The volume contains a well-engraved portrait of Napoleon as Lieutenant-Colonel of Artillery in 1792. Mr. Bohn has also brought out, in two volumes, the late Professor Smyth's Lectures on the History of the French Revolution, with the author's last corrections, and an additional lecture on the causes of the great events on which he commented. He commences with the reign of Louis XIV., and concludes with the Reign of Terror. There are supplementary lectures on "Dumont" and "America." He expressed some doubts as to the stability of our Constitution—declares that there is no freedom of thought in this country—complains of "the tyranny of the majority"—asserts that lawyers are the American aristocracy—sneers at the "vulgar aspect of the House of Representatives"—regrets the great circulation of our newspapers—and winds up by declaring Washington to be the glory and Washington the pride of our Union. We recommend Mignet & Smyth to be studied, as much for the purpose of comparison as instruction. (New-York: Harper & Co.)

Novel-readers, like the Gleour in Vathek, perpetually clamor for "More, more." Among the gifted persons who endeavor to supply this demand is Mrs. Hubback, niece, we believe, to Jane Austen, the eminent English novelist. Scarcely any writer of the present day has given more exquisite sketches of English home-life. In her last work, entitled The Old Vicarage, Mrs. Hubback appears to more advantage than in any preceding one. It is evident that her characters are not mere inventions; they live, and breathe, and act like real people, and very real they are. A more charming love-story we have not read for a long time. (New-York: W. P. Fetridge.)

The Economy of Church, Parsonage, and School Architecture, (adapted to small societies and rural districts,) design, estimate, etc., by Charles [illegible] Downing, Architect, and Civil Engineer, author of several popular works. There are a great many well-executed illustrations, consisting of views, plans and details. This book is the production of a practical man, and all persons intending to build a church, parsonage, or school-house, will do well to make himself master of the information here communicated. (Buffalo: Phinney & Co.)

Charles A. Sandoe's High School Reader, containing a collection of pieces and extracts, in prose and verse, well adapted for mental improvement as well as rhetorical exercise, among which we recognize very few of the hackneyed specimens which generally figure in such works. The best authors and orators, past and present, have been drawn upon; among the latter we notice Thomas F. Meagher's impressive speech, on conviction at Clonmel, on the question being put why sentence of death should not be passed upon him. Here, too, with great propriety, are some splendid extracts from Webster, and other of our great orators, with curious passages from native poets. We notice, to condemn, (as unjust to the author of Gil Blas,) separate portions of that amusing story altered into a dramatic form, and spoiled by the process, in order to make an effective dialogue. (New-York: Ivison & Phinney.)

There is a living German author named Mr. Hackländer, characterized by Alison, the historian, as combining the leading features which so entirely elevate Dickens and Bulwer far above all cotemporary novelists. His most celebrated work (called Europäische Sclavenleben) has been translated in English, under the title of Clara, or Slave Life in Europe. It has been republished here, and is certainly a romance of real life, in which, while no character or incident at all verges on the improbable, the interest is kept up from the first page to the last. Many and various phases of society are exhibited, apparently with truth, and undoubtedly with spirit as well as skill. The whole effect is dramatic—the whole purpose good. It is a sort of European "Uncle Tom." (New-York: Harper & Brothers.)

The States and Territories of the Great West, by Jacob Ferris, contains a vast amount of information on the rise, progress, and present condition of a large portion of our country, fast rising into importance from its fruitful soil, mineral wealth, increasing population, commercial capabilities, and political promise. The author writes of what he has full personal knowledge, and enlivens the dullness of statistics by a cheerful and pleasant narrative style. There is a good map, with numerous engravings, but no index. (New-York: Miller, Orton, & Mulligan.)

Washington Allston wrote a charming Tale, once upon a time, entitled Monaldi. Composed in 1822, for a periodical which "died too soon," it was not published until 1841. Ticknor & Fields, of Boston, have just re-issued this charming Italian story, which has long been out of print, and a very acceptable book it is. None but a poet-painter could have composed such a tale, deeply imbued with high feeling for Art. The sketches of Italian scenery and manners also show local knowledge, close observation, and picturesque composition. Indeed, Allston painted with words as well as colors.

Forest and Shore, containing several highly interesting "Legends of the Pine-Tree State," by Charles P. Ilsley, is an agreeable book—just the work to carry into the country during the warm weather, and read as you repose "at listless length" beneath the shadow of a mighty tree, and within hearing of the harmonies made by a rippling stream as it rushes over a pebbly bed. (Boston: John P. Jewett.)

A Township Map of Eastern Kansas, by Whitman & Shaale, general land agents at Lawrence, Kansas, is apparently a correct and undoubtedly a well-timed publication. At present, Kansas shows but a thinly-inhabited country—in less than twenty years, the energy and enterprise of our citizens may make it a rich and populous State. (Boston: J. P. Jewett & Co.)

A Study for Young Men is a memoir of Sir T. F. Buxton, "improved" from the biography by his Son. This has been done by Mr. T. Binney, (a dissenting preacher in London,) with the view of "pointing a moral" from the exemplary public and private life of Buxton. (Boston: Crosby Nichols & Co.)

The Fruit Garden, by P. Barry, illustrated with 150 wood-cuts, is a practical treatise on "Horticulture," of such established reputation that it has reached a twelfth edition. It is, indeed, a sort of cyclopedia on the subject it exhausts. (New-York: C. Scribner.)

The Era of Compromises—A New One Proposed.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Compromise is a great word, and this is a great country for compromises. The only difficulty about them is that they do not last. The Missouri Compromise lasted thirty-five years, and then the acute Cass and the amiable Douglas put on their "forty-million magnifying gas spectacles—as Sam Weller would say—and discovered that it was unconstitutional. In 1850 we had the Fillmore Compromises which were to settle the Slavery question and prevent agitation forever. No one now thinks much of them. A South Carolina genius has sent a communication to the National Intelligencer, setting forth his system of Compromise, and it is a sick and funny production. He proposes that every one may take all sorts of property (of course including slaves) into the Territories. His first idea takes for granted what a large majority of the people of the United States deny to be true, namely, that man can have property in man. After there are enough settlers in a Territory to entitle it to a representative in Congress, he proposes that a vote shall be taken, as to whether Slavery shall continue to exist or not; for as slaves are to be introduced by the Southern settlers, the vote will not be on the establishment of Slavery, but on the perpetuation of it. At this election none are to vote but bona fide settlers. Oh, no; but as to what Mr. Hammersham's idea of a bona fide settler is he has kept us in the dark. The Border-Ruffians all maintained that they were bona fide settlers in Kansas. Persons living there were to vote; they were there; they were alive; therefore they were voters. And they voted, just as Arnold Douglas meant that they should, when he pushed the Kansas bill through Congress.

The South Carolinian next proposes that free negroes shall be excluded from the Territory; very consistently in one who maintains that Slavery is a fountain of happiness to the slave. It would hurt the feelings of the slaves to see unhappy free negroes around them.

Mr. Hammersham adds, speaking of the negro: "He is the happiest in the moderate servitude of the South, and will be in it but educated for liberty, if he is capable of enjoying it."

This idea of educating men for Liberty by keeping them in Slavery is about as rational as it would be to teach boys to swim by showing them how to make the motions on an ironing-table.

Mr. Hammersham goes on to show where this education can best be afforded: "This education can be only given in the position of a bound servant of the white." How does he know that? Many free negroes in the Northern States are much better educated than the slaves in South Carolina, to whom learning is a forbidden fruit. And he adds that this education "is most effective in sections where the two races are brought in more immediate contact than on the plantations;" and then he adds a little sprinkling of piety, to make his essay go down. Southern friends please [illegible] "It may be that Providence intends to ameliorate the position of the negro in the highest degree consistent with the allotted task as servant of servant, in the position of the West, where the patriarchal and personal tie can be most conveniently discharged."

Mr. Hammersham was born three thousand years too late. The patriarchal life, which included polygamy, is not in very good odor at this day among civilized people, and the cultivation of grain can support twenty times as many people as the raising of human.

As to the task allotted to the negro as "servant of servant," Mr. Hammersham doubtless refers to Noah's curse, after he awoke from his drunken debauch, and cursed his grandson, by mistake, for an offence committed by his son. The descendants of Ham were the Canaanites, whom the children of Israel nearly exterminated, upon their return from their house of bondage in Egypt, and these Canaanites were as white as Mr. Hammersham. This is a great country, and the National Intelligencer is a great newspaper.

W. R.

THE GERMANS AND FREEDOM.

Gustav Struve's Address to the Germans.

We translate from the New-York Staats Demokrat the following address from the distinguished Gustav Struve to his countrymen in America:

Friends and Countrymen: Since the most remote periods of history men have struggled for Freedom. The nations of antiquity exerted themselves during countless centuries without advancing farther than to the forms of Freedom. The masses remained beneath the yoke of Slavery, had no voice in the councils of the people, and were obliged to labor without obtaining remuneration. In the course of the middle ages, the more civilized nations of Europe brought the rights of man so far as the acknowledgment of personal liberty. Turkey is the only European power which permits and shields Slavery by its laws.

The whole civilized world has, with singular unanimity, expressed itself against Slavery. In the War of Independence, all the honored leaders of the people shared the opinions of Europe—the men of the South, Washington and Jefferson, not less than those lofty minds of the North, Thomas Paine and Benjamin Franklin. Slavery was acknowledged to be an evil, and the only question was how long it should be suffered to exist. But the slaveholders of the South, the most cruel and avaricious of all aristocrats in the world, effected it by means of their wealth, obtained by slave labor, and by means of a strong organization, that Slavery became an institution not only equal to Freedom, but in fact preferred before it. The Slaveholders are more influential in the White House than the representatives of the Free States. Since many years all Presidents have thrown the weight of their office into the scale of Slavery, and in Congress the representatives of Freedom were forced to listen to the threat, "We mean to subdue you." The means which the party of the South employed, have become from year to year more revolting. At first they obtained their aims by bribery; when the North resisted they proceeded to open violence, not only in Kansas, but also in Washington, in the halls of the Senate.

The great question of the day is: Will the South carry out its threat to subdue the North, or will the North force back the South within the violated boundaries of Justice?

The question is not "Slavery or Freedom." Alas, the South is yet much too strong, the North far too weak, to make this practicable. The question is merely, shall the South bring the free North under its iron yoke by the same means by which it rules its slaves? Shall freedom of the press, of speech, of assemblage, of election, and every other freedom in regard to the great question of the day be also entirely destroyed at the North, as it already is at the South? Shall, at the North, too, every one who dares to enter the lists for liberty be beaten down by paid bandits? Shall Messrs. Atchison and Stringfellow, with the assistance of the United States troops, introduce Slavery into Nebraska also, and into the other territories of the West? Shall a murderous assault upon a Senator be bought off for $300 in Pennsylvania, also, or in New-York?

Those who have sold themselves to the Slaveholders, or who have too little intelligence to comprehend the state of the Union, to be sure, represent the matter quite differently.

They denounce the party which supports Fremont and Dayton, as Know-Nothings and Temperance men, and speak to you of the white slaves who need your sympathy more than the black. They deny that the extension or limitation of Slavery is at stake, and even attack the person of the Republican Presidential candidate in various ways.

The best proof that the Know-Nothings, as such, have nothing in common with the party represented by Fremont, is, that the Southern members of the Order have separated from the Northern members. In the South we find the Know-Nothings connected with the "Nigger-driving" party, in the North with the party of Freedom, from which it appears that even by themselves the Slavery question is considered of more importance than the purpose of their Order. Otherwise it would never have produced a division in the latter.

Just so it is with the Temperance fanatics. We see them in the ranks at the South and at the North, there working for Slavery, here for Freedom. In fact, the so-called Temperance question has nothing in common with the Presidential election. Neither in the Slavery party nor in the Northern platform is it alluded to. Dear friends, whoever connects the Presidential election with the Temperance question, wishes merely to throw dust in your eyes.

As regards the white slaves, there are, alas, only too many; they are those who, though born free, carry Slavery in their hearts, have sold themselves to the slaveholders, and for base gold advocate their evil cause. To call the free laborer of the North, who has equal rights with the richest citizen, and occupies a worthier position than in any other country of the world—to call him a white slave is a shameless lie which he will not submit to. He will prove at the ballot-box that he is no slave, but as a free man enters the lists for Freedom.

Nor is the next lie any better, that in this election the question does not concern Slavery and Freedom, but that the North only wails itself of the cry to gain votes. The truth is, that Fremont and the Republican Party are endeavoring to make Kansas a free State, while Buchanan and the so-called Democrats are doing their best to make a Slave State of it. The fate of Kansas will certainly be shared by Nebraska, Washington and Oregon. If Kansas becomes a Slave State, the remaining Territories are also lost to Freedom, and the overweight of the slave-power is so great that the aristocrats of the South will soon rule at the North as now they do at home.

It is a further fact that, since the Union existed, the slaveholding South has never as yet stood so directly opposed to the free North as in this election. Mr. Fillmore contends even that the South will not abide by the election should the choice fall upon Fremont and Dayton. Mere plurality of votes cannot be shown. What in all the world but the slave question can bring the two great portions of the Union, divided only as regards this, into such opposition. Do not be deceived, dear friends. In the approaching Presidential election Slavery is the question. To be sure, it is not directly Slavery or Freedom, but the extension or limitation of Slavery.

For the extension of Slavery no opponent of Despotism can vote. For the worst form in which Despotism appears is Slavery. Louis Napoleon and the Austrian Emperor leave their subjects their personal freedom, because they feel they may be by their tyranny. But they do not sell men, women and children in the public market. The slaveholders of the South have indeed threatened that the time would come when they would call the roll of their slaves at the foot of the Bunker Hill monument, but I believe the free men of the North will prevent it.

Let us compare the two opposing Presidential candidates. The most noted deed in the life of Buchanan was the Ostend manifesto, which he signed together with Soulé and Mason—and dropped, without resigning his office, when he was not able to carry out its provisions. The great deed in Fremont's life is the freedom of California and its gold mines. To him we owe it that this State fell neither into the chains of Slavery nor of monopoly. Whom do you prefer? The diplomat of Ostend or the founder of California's freedom and its unmeasurable gold mines?

And now, in conclusion, a word to you, compatriots of the years 1848 or 1849, who, with me, have staked your property and your blood for Freedom beyond the ocean. Show that it was not the excitement of the moment which drove you on to the course of liberty; that you know for what you fought, for which we have fled and the hearts of our dear ones left behind us. The great question of freedom takes different forms in the Old and New World, in all its essentials it is the same. Those who beyond the ocean are the aristocrats, are here the slaveholders—those who would reap but not labor. Which side of ourselves could ever again enter the ranks of Freedom if we had here advocated the extension of Slavery? Every man of Freedom would turn his back upon the advocates of Slavery, as upon a backslider from the cause.

I myself cannot vote, I am no citizen of America and do not intend to become one, because I have made the struggle against the despots of Europe the principal task of my life. But I wished to say to you how I would have voted had I become a citizen, for Fremont and Dayton!

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

The Espiègle Bulletin says the vote of Mississippi at the next Presidential election is estimated at 110,000. The number of enrolled members of the American Party in that State is said to be 60,000, exclusive of sympathizers, who will probably increase the vote for the Americans on election to 80,000.

A vote taken among the passengers on board the Morning Star during a recent trip from St. Joseph to St. Louis, was attended with the following result: for Fremont, 54; for Fillmore, 16; for Buchanan, 2.

If Fremont be a Catholic, as the opponents unscrupulously assert, why do all the Catholic presses so violently oppose him?

The Saturday Daily Advertiser states as a fact a prominent Know-Nothing of that city was heard to say to another Know-Nothing a few days since that, "we (the Fillmore Americans) must drop Fillmore, and go in for Buchanan, for if we don't Fremont must carry this State by a large majority." Reasoning like Mr. Fillmore's chances for this State wholly out of the question," adds the Advertiser, "they are ready and willing to drop their candidate and go in for any man that is at all available, for the purpose, if possible, of preventing the election of a man who is pledged to Freedom."

It is a noticeable fact that everywhere the machanics go for Fremont. A vote was recently taken among the attaches and employes of the Ohio Tool Company, of Columbus, with the following result: Fremont 33; Buchanan 11; Fillmore 4.

The following is from the Albany Evening Transcript:

"We understand, from undoubted authority, that a Convention of 'Young America' is projected, to be held some time prior to the November election, and that the initiatory steps have been taken to carry into effect the movement for such an assemblage. Gentlemen are now engaged in arranging the preliminaries, and, from what we learn, we presume that it will call together a very large representation of the young men of the State. The object of this gathering is to give expression to the sentiments of 'Young America' with reference to the approaching political campaign, and to declare their preference for such candidate as they may consider most suitable to receive their support."

Among the meetings which have been organized under the direction of the Buchanan State Executive Committee is one for Toledo, on the 24th of September, of all who desire to secure Slavery in Kansas.

The Pro-Slavery Germans of Toledo held a meeting on Tuesday evening last, but it was feeble, both in numbers and character. Here, as elsewhere, the great majority of the German population advocate the cause of Freedom and Fremont.

A number of the ladies of Fall River have organized themselves into an association, which they style the "Jessie Circle."

Hon. John C. Breckinridge, the Democratic candidate for the Vice-Presidency, was, at latest accounts, in Louisville, Ky.

President Fillmore is at the Montcalm House, Suspension Bridge, on a visit to the Falls.

The Fremont men of New-Haven have organized themselves into an association, under the title of "The Pathfinders."

The Free Press is the title of a new paper just issued in Rochester for Fremont, and representing the Radical Democracy. It raises no flag, saving and excepting the call of the Radical Democratic State Convention.

The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, of Wednesday, says:

"Some gentlemen of our acquaintance, thinking that we had an estimate of the political opinion of our city as could be obtained without the gift of the block, bounded by Washington, Seneca and Main streets, inasmuch as in that block there are one Fremont and three Buchanan papers, yesterday took a canvass of the votes of those belonging exclusively to the block and entitled to the franchise privilege. The vote taken was confined to the first stories, with the exception of the printing offices. The result was:

Fillmore	129	Fremont	43
Buchanan	34	Gerrit Smith	1
Doubtful			13

Hon. Joseph Knox, of Illinois, a leading lawyer of that State, and a Pierce elector in 1852—always a Democrat—addressed a Fremont meeting at Rock Island, and came out flat-footed for the Pathfinder.

From votes taken on different trains and at different localities on the New-York and Erie Railroad on Tuesday, we give the following aggregate: Fremont, 138; Fillmore, 49; Buchanan, 25; Undecided, 7.

Mass Fremont Conventions are to be held at Dayton, Fremont, Zanesville, Chillicothe and Massillon, Ohio, during the month of August. These Conventions, however, are not intended to interfere with the series of mass meetings in every county in Ohio, which are now being arranged, and which will in due time be announced.

The following is an extract from a private letter from Northern Indiana:

"I think this State will turn up all right. Our last election was Democratic, it is true, but it was only for County officers where such a great national issue as that of Slavery had little if any influence. Even State officers and legislators are only elected once in two years in Indiana. This year there was no session at all, and no election excitement. But the Republican cause has stirred the people up, and they are beginning to talk and work in earnest. In our town I only know of two Buchanan men, and they are isolated individuals with no influence. Even our Postmaster, who had been supposed to be an Administration man, though he never said much, now comes out strong for Fremont, and indignantly tears up all electioneering circulars which come in numbers directed to him. Last night we had our first political meeting here; it was crowded and the audience responded enthusiastically to denunciations of all parties and glorifications of one side. In most of the neighboring towns large and influential Fremont Clubs have been formed."

The Sunday School attached to the Seventh-street M. E. Church had an excursion to Flushing yesterday, at which there were 54 legal voters, not one of which would vote for a Catholic to fill the Presidential Chair. Upon a vote, there were for Fremont 34, for Fillmore 9, for Buchanan 6, undecided 9. Total 54.

Rhode Island—Letter from John Whipple.

Providence, Friday, July 18, 1856.

Dear Sir: I was in Providence yesterday, or rather the day before, and intended to have seen you, but very numerous little orders to attend to occupied my whole day. I cannot comply with your urgent and flattering request for numerous reasons. I am with you heart and soul for Fremont. I know the man. Whatever he does he gives his whole energies to, because he gives his whole heart to. It is a good heart, and his indorser (as you might call it at Bank) is a resolution which no danger can appal, and no temptation can seduce. Poll the entire population of the whole country and you could not come nearer to my model for a President. With the energy of Gen. Jackson he unites the purity and firmness of Washington. He is my man all over, from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. If I could I would appear among you with my feeble testimony. But for reasons which I will give you at another time, and which I am sure will satisfy you, I cannot be with you.

With great respect, very truly your friend,

JOHN WHIPPLE.

Wm. S. Fayne, Esq.

Col. Fremont's Catholicism.

From the Boston Morning, July 21.

Up to the nomination of Col. Fremont for the Presidency, no man had ever heard that he was a Catholic. He had acquired a reputation over the whole civilized world, and his name had become familiar in every town and hamlet in the country, and no one had ever heard a breath of his being a Catholic. He became a member of the French Episcopal Church at the age of sixteen, and has ever since been an active and regular attendant of that denomination. His children have all been baptized in the Church of Epiphany, at Washington, as is proved beyond all dispute by the certificate of Rev. Mr. Pugnin, Rector of that Church, the first in 1846, and the last in 1850. But the moment he is selected as a candidate for President, Col. Fremont, his family, his friends and his enemies are suddenly astonished with a story that he is a Catholic. There was no evidence to prove the story, and the baldness of the fraud, as well as the badness of the method, was too much to deceive any one. Suddenly, an obscure Alderman by the name of Pyfrick, appears as a witness, and gives a pretended conversation between the colonel, took place at Brown's Hotel, Washington, after having seen Colonel Fremont in the Catholic Church in this city, and witnessed his crossing the water at the sacrament. The story was necessarily false, as every intelligent person knows, this "conversation" alleged to have been pressed into details, in regard to which he, and he truly convicted himself most conclusively. His testimony is all that the New-York Express has relied upon to establish its charge. And to sum the conversation which Mr. Pyfrick with Col. Fremont, at Brown's Hotel, in Washington, relative to Fremont's religion, he stated in the New-York Express, took place in the latter part of January, or the first part of February, 1856, as he (Pyfrick) went to Washington the first part of January, 1856, remained there about six weeks, and returned home to New-York before the middle of February of that year.

On looking over the files of the New-York Express [illegible] "Fremont and family. The Colonel is now quite up in a trace to history of his ancestors which he has traced back to the year 1600." The same paper, of the date of March 6, 1856, says: "Fremont and family are stopping at Brown's Hotel." Mr. Fillmore and Mr. R. R. Fillmore and Col. J. C. Fremont and family are in the living house, room in the Senate Chamber, to-day, from Washington." The same paper further says, of the date of March 10, 1856: "Congress called to the assembly of Rev. Mr. Ives and Col. J. C. Fremont and family."

FOREIGN NEWS.

The following is a translation of the ordinance by which the Christian soldiers in the East are permitted to follow their religion, secure from persecution: "We commend all general officers, colonels and other heads of these corps in our army which are Christian soldiers, to take care that they may observe their religion in perfect freedom. It is therefore our order that every Sunday, and every day celebrated as a religious festival according to their rites, the Christian soldiers shall be marched in a body, and without arms, to their respective churches, accompanied by officers, who at the close of their religious exercises will bring them back to their corps."

A letter from St. Petersburg of 20th June, says: Since the opening of the navigation our port is crowded with vessels; never have such numbers been seen here before. The custom officers are overwhelmed with business. Up to the 25th June there had been 974 arrivals at Cronstadt, and 288 departures. Yesterday the arrivals had been increased to more than a thousand. At Riga the arrivals were 885 up to June 19, and the departures 445. The inland commerce is not less active.

The Cologne Gazette is responsible for the following story: "When Palmer was condemned, the Sardinian Ambassador telegraphed to Turin, 'Palmer, condemned to death, will be hanged at Engeley.' The official at Turin wrote for 'Palm.' (abridged for 'Palmer') 'Palmerston,' and sent it as an official dispatch to the Minister Cavour. The latter, having smiled on reading it, left it open on his desk, and in a few minutes the report went like wildfire through Turin that the English had hanged their Prime Minister."

The Piedmontese army of the East attained a maximum of 17,584 men. Up to October 31, 1855, it lost 1,682 men, of whom 1,211 died of cholera, 170 of typhus fever, and 251 from wounds and other causes. In this number there were 56 officers, 1,563 non-commissioned officers and soldiers, and 18 belonging to the commissariat.

Our Immigrants.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Much is said by many against our foreign population—but is it known what their true character is, and what they are weekly bringing into the country? I was, this morning, at the Castle Garden and had access to the books, where the names of the immigrants are recorded, and the amounts they brought into the country. On a very few pages I noticed the names of Germans recently arrived, with the following sums:—(I give you the sums without the names.)—one family of 10 with $25,000, another having $1,000, another, $1,200; another, a family of four, $6,000; six parties, bound to Chicago, with $9,000, $2,000, $1,200, $700, $1,000, $2,000; a Prussian with $4,000; another German with $6,000; another with $5,000. On one page all are $100 and under, excepting one, who had $4,823. On the next page one with $4,000. Surely, these are neither jail-birds nor town paupers. Why should not Mr. Fillmore bid them welcome?

NEWS BY THE MAILS.

The Windsor Herald states that last Saturday night, when the eastward bound train on the Great Western Railway, was near to Thamesville, about sixty miles from Windsor, two shots were fired at the engine driver, but fortunately missed the object in both instances. The driver stated it was the third he has, on any occasion, given offence to, in one way, but it is supposed there are four kind of traits were killed two or three days previously, near the same spot, the shooting may have arisen from that circumstance.

Several destructive fires are now raging in the country, and especially between Buffalo and Rochester. The Buffalo Express learns from gentlemen who came over the Central Road on Wednesday, that fires are burning in several places, and that between this city and Batavia, are some places where the heat and smoke were intolerable. Houses are endangered, standing crops destroyed, and valuable timber reduced to ashes.

☞ In the Senate yesterday, the bill authorizing the protection of citizens of the United States, who may discover guano deposits was passed. A synopsis of its provisions will be found in the report of the regular proceedings. Various Harbor Improvement bills were discussed and passed. The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Army Appropriation bill. Mr. BANNOCK moved to amend the clause appropriating $3,375,000 for the pay of the Army, by adding a disapproval of the code of alleged laws of Kansas, and the manner in which they are enforced, declaring that until they shall be confirmed by Congress, no part of the Federal military forces shall be employed for their enforcement. After a lengthy and animated debate on this proposition, Mr. STANTON moved an amendment declaring the laws of Kansas null and void. This amendment was agreed to by a vote of 67 against 56, and then Mr. BANNOCK's proposition, thus amended, was adopted by 72 against 57. The House has yet to vote on the bill. A resolution was reported from the Committee on Elections, declaring Mr. BUFFUM entitled to the seat as Delegate from Kansas. The resolution will be called up on Wednesday next. The evening session was occupied in political debates.

Popular Sovereignty.

The Albany Atlas and Argus replies to our former comments upon its view of the Nebraska bill, and expresses a willingness to pursue still further a "friendly conference" with us upon the subject, so far as it may consider it likely to be "profitable to the public." We submit to the Atlas and Argus, that no such controversy upon this or any other subject is likely to be profitable, if the evidence adduced by one party is evaded and concealed by the other. It is all very well for that paper to dismiss the principal point of our article by professing an indisposition to deal with its "vituperative:"—but the terms of the Cincinnati platform, and the express language of Mr. BUCHANAN, can scarcely be disposed of by such an epithet. We shall restate our view of the case, and leave the Atlas and Argus to decide whether it will present it fairly, or not.

The Democratic Party has indorsed the principles of the Nebraska bill. It is committed to those principles, both by its platform and its candidate. The Atlas and Argus, also approving the bill, contends that by virtue of its provisions, the people of Kansas may admit or exclude Slavery, while it remains a Territory; and it presents this as the doctrine of popular sovereignty embodied in the Nebraska bill, and indorsed, both by the platform and candidate of the Democratic Party. Now this we deny. We deny that the right of the people to exclude Slavery from a Territory, before they make it a State, is embodied in the Nebraska bill, or asserted by either the Cincinnati platform or by JAMES BUCHANAN. On the contrary, we assert that it is either openly or tacitly repudiated by both.

And first as to the language of the bill itself. The bill declares its "true intent and meaning" to be, to leave the people of any Territory or State "perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States." Now these last words either mean something, or nothing. If the Constitution permits the people of the Territory to prohibit Slavery therein, they can exercise the power which that clause of the bill confers. If it does not, then they cannot do it, and the whole clause is nugatory. The Atlas charges us with holding the doctrine, that the Constitution does not permit them then to prohibit Slavery. [illegible] for such a charge. But it is [illegible] to any one what our [illegible] Democratic Party and its Candidates [illegible] plain. Does the Democratic Party [illegible] people of Kansas the right to prohibit Slavery from the Territory? This is the vital question; and the answer to it is to be found in the action of the Party in national Convention at Cincinnati, where it will [illegible]

Resolved, That we recognize the right of the people of all Territories, including Kansas and Nebraska, acting through the legally and fairly expressed will of a majority of actual residents, and whenever the number of their inhabitants justifies it, to form a Constitution, with or without domestic Slavery, and be admitted into the Union upon terms of perfect equality with the other States.

The Atlas and Argus must concede that no such doctrine is asserted here. The right of the people to exclude Slavery from the Territory is not even alluded to. On the contrary, that right is virtually denied, by the declaration that it begins to exist only when the people reach a certain number, and when they cease to be inhabitants of a Territory, and become citizens of a State. The platform, therefore, which is the authoritative exponent of the views of the party, tacitly and by strong implication asserts the doctrine which the Atlas and Argus imputes to us, namely, that the Constitution does not permit the people of a Territory to exclude Slavery therefrom.

And now, how is it with the other authority:—how does the Candidate of the party stand upon the issue? Does he believe that the People of a Territory may exclude Slavery, under the Constitution? The following is his own answer to this inquiry:—we reprint it now, because it seems to have entirely escaped the notice of the Atlas and Argus when we gave it before:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21, 1848.

DEAR SIR: I have just received yours of the 12th inst., in which you submit to me the following paragraph, and ask whether it contains an accurate version of the conversation between us, concerning my Berks County letter, on the occasion to which you refer:

"Happening to meet Mr. BUCHANAN at the President's levee, on Friday evening, I called his attention to this letter, and asked him if he intended to be understood as claiming that the population of a Territory in an unorganized capacity had the right to control the question of Slavery in such Territory. He declared that no such idea had ever been maintained by him; that the construction put upon his language by Mr. YANCEY was a perversion of its plain and obvious meaning; that, in his opinion, the inhabitants of a Territory, as such, had no political rights, [although they possessed all the private rights of American citizens;] that they had NO POWER WHATEVER OVER THE SUBJECT OF SLAVERY, and they could neither interdict nor establish it, except when assembled in Convention to form a State Constitution. He further authorized and requested me to make any public use of these declarations that I might think proper, to correct any impression which Mr. YANCEY's construction of his language in the Berks letter might have made."

With the addition which I have inserted between brackets, this statement is SUBSTANTIALLY AND ALMOST LITERALLY CORRECT, according to my recollection.

* * * *

Yours, very truly,

JAMES BUCHANAN.

We submit that the following points are established by this evidence:

1. That the Nebraska bill gives the People of the Territory control over Slavery, only so far as that control may be held to be constitutional.

2. That the Democratic Platform denies explicitly the power of Congress to interfere with Slavery in any Territory, and does not assert the Constitutional right of the People thereof to do so:—but by implication strongly denies it.

3. That the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, in express terms, denies that right, and asserts explicitly that the people of a Territory have, under the Constitution, no control whatever over the subject of Slavery therein.

4. That if Mr. BUCHANAN should be elected, his Executive action would be governed entirely by this construction of the Constitution:—that he would veto any act of Congress that might prohibit Slavery in any Territory:—that he would appoint officers who would nullify any attempt of the people of a Territory to exclude Slavery therefrom:—and that the whole weight of his position would thus necessarily be thrown in favor of the doctrine, that the Constitution carries Slavery, or protects it when carried by individuals, into any territory of the United States.

Now, if the Atlas and Argus will meet this fairly, and as we present it, we shall be glad to hear what it may have to say.

Ballot-Box Stuffing.

The transparent villainies of "Pacific" election swindlers originate on the "Atlantic" side a transparent ballot box. An ingenious mechanic offers to the Aldermen of New-York a glass box for the reception of votes. It is said that one of the City fathers, on seeing the article, remarked that "it was a temptation to a smash." But the present of such an arrangement to our tax dispensers is precisely that which few of them want. To permit the daylight to shine upon the mysteries of the elective franchise in New-York City is no part of a well-trained municipal authority!

It is claimed by those familiar with the appearance of the little jokers among political thimble-riggers that the ballot-box has never been to blame at our municipal polls. Slides and stuffed ballots have been fashionable with the primaries, but in the general election have never been found practicable because there were too many lookers-on, and, as Signor BLITZ used to say, no chance for practice.

There is a fraud beyond the ballot box that demands attention from Vigilance Committees in the political clubs now organizing—the fraud of "swapping" and "juggling" returns! This is never so easy to accomplish as where there are more than two candidates in the race for office, for then there are many weaker rivulets of votes that may be diverted in manufacturing a torrent—such a one as the Yankee Sullivans of 1852 contrived for General FRANK in this City. The trial of Giles vs. Flagg, and that—not so recent—of the People against the Twentieth Ward Return Officers, exhibited the ease and dexterity with which returns might be juggled in the hands of unscrupulous inspectors. It is true the canvass is conducted in public, but the tallies are kept sometimes on slates—sometimes with pencil—and in nearly every case upon loose scraps of paper. If the returns meant to be official are made up at the polling place—which the law intends shall be done—they are taken away on route to the Alderman or the County Clerk and are readily altered by the person in charge who has only to insert a fresh leaf in place of a detached one.

The entire columns of this paper could be filled with examples of the various methods capable of being used by the unscrupulous. But an instance of the [illegible] hundred: and then A receives from these 250; B 75 and C 65—if 10 votes are taken from B and given to A, and 20 more from C exchanged to the same column, the tally of a whole number is thus returned, whilst A is 30 votes better off than the electors intended he should be. The security of the fraud lies in an old proverb more practical than grammatical: "What is every body's business is no body's business," and in the probability of a defeated candidate never caring to question the loss of a few votes here and a few votes there. It is this transposition of results which defrauds electors and not the stuffing of ballot-boxes. And the City swarms with experts in the art, who, keeping the cool head and unerring memory and gambling arithmetic of a professed rake, can surpass even the Wizard ANNANIAS in rapid combinations and transformations.

The fraud is easiest of accomplishment in precincts where a party is very strong and where the inspectors, although professedly elected on different tickets, are nevertheless of the same political faith. Whilst the statute law is defective upon the subject of providing that returns must be sealed at the public polling places, these facilities for alteration should be watched by Vigilance Committees detailed at the polls. Let the latter be strongly guarded by detachments of electors, who with pencil and paper in hand shall at the close of the polls succeed the challengers and figure down every call and movement of the inspectors, and thus stenograph the results of the canvass. The different clubs affected by these frauds cannot too soon commence the discussion of this subject—the appointment of investigating committees—and the arrangement of an extended guard upon inspector jugglery.

Illegal Taxation on Account of the Central Park.

If the American people value any one portion of their birthright of freedom more than another, it is the exemption they enjoy from arbitrary taxation. The key to nearly every struggle against tyranny which the Anglo-Saxon race has undergone within the last two centuries, is contained in the words—"resistance to taxation without representation." Inhabitants of this metropolis inherit from their Dutch and English forefathers a double share of inborn hatred against the undue exercise of governmental power over their property, and it might be supposed that this would be sufficient to guarantee them against every attempt to violate their privileges in this respect. It is an axiom of liberty that taxes may only be levied by duly authorized representatives of the people, in such a manner as is distinctly prescribed by law. The Board of Supervisors of the City and County of New-York, at the instigation of the Mayor and Street Commissioner, are, nevertheless, at this very instant, in the matter of the Central Park, making an attempt to lay a tax, for which the Legislature has not only made neither direct nor indirect provision, but which is in opposition to statute law; and, if permitted, will put every dollar of City property at the mercy of incumbents of municipal office. The action of the Mayor and Street Commissioner is opposed by the Comptroller, Mr. FLAGG, and by the Counsel of the Corporation, Mr. SHEPARD, both of whom, we are told, reprobate this new scheme of plunder with all the force which their influence and position warrant.

The circumstances of the case are as follows: The Board of Supervisors met, as is known, on the second Wednesday in July, for the purpose of receiving from the Comptroller the tax-books for 1856, for examination and confirmation. It was found that the tax levy for the year would amount to the sum of $7,075,000. Notwithstanding this enormous and unprecedented burden to be imposed on City property, the Mayor and Street Commissioner, as Commissioners of the Central Park, laid a communication before the Board, in which they proposed that $200,000 should be added to the tax bill, to be placed at their disposal, to be expended on the Park. The plan was strenuously advocated by the Mayor, and also by the Recorder in person, who both, together with twelve other Supervisors, voted in favor of the additional tax, so that it was adopted. At the same time, the whole matter was, in accordance with necessary usage, referred to the Committee on Annual Taxes of the Board, to bring in a Report and the customary resolutions. A few days later, on the 14th inst., this Committee presented their Report; but, convinced of the illegality of the $200,000 scheme, omitted any reference to it in their resolutions. A motion was therefore made to postpone further action until the 21st of July, (last Monday,) and, in the meanwhile, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, At the last meeting of this Board, a resolution was adopted, adding $200,000 to the amount of the tax levy, authorized by the act of the Legislature to be used by the Commissioners of the Central Park; and

Whereas, Doubts exist as to the legality of the measure; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Counsel to the Corporation be, and he is hereby requested to examine the subject, and to report to this Board, at its next meeting, his opinion in relation thereto.

A previous communication to Mr. SHEPARD contained the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Counsel to the Corporation be, and he is hereby directed to report to this Board his opinion, whether or not it is absolutely compulsory upon the Common Council to make application to the Legislature of the State, annually, for the passage of a law to authorize the levying of the usual and necessary taxation; also, whether the county of New-York does not possess the competent authority, given it by the charter or otherwise, to raise a sufficient taxation for its own support.

On Monday last, at the adjourned meeting of the Board, the communication from the Counsel of the Corporation, in response to these resolutions, was received, laid on the table, and ordered to be printed. It had been taken for granted that the expressed will of the gentlemen most interested in the expenditure of the money, would have imposed upon Mr. SHEPARD and also upon Mr. FLAGG, a sort of moral necessity (!) of replying in a manner favorable to the wishes of the Mayor and Street Commissioner. Such a hope does not seem, however, to have been fulfilled. The Counsel [illegible] contained upon the second page of the printed document, as follows:

"Three questions are presented:

1. Whether the City and County of New-York have or not the power to levy (usual and necessary taxes, without any legislative act or authority.

2. Whether there be any general statute which authorizes the levy of usual and necessary taxes for the support of the City of New-York, without special application to the Legislature.

3. Whether the City and County of New-York has the power to raise the specific sum of $200,000 by taxation, to be used by the Commissioners of the Central Park.

To the first question, I answer that it has not.

To the second question, I answer that there is not.

To the third question, I answer that it has not."

On the day after the Corporation Counsel had presented his communication to the Board of Supervisors, he took the still more decided step, in opposition to the tax, of procuring from Judge WRIGHT, of the Supreme Court, an injunction against its being inserted in the tax levy, and so the case now stands. The Mayor, Recorder and Board are required to show cause to-day, and the Board has adjourned, in the meanwhile, until the 4th of August, that the matter may be decided. We learn that much angry feeling was manifested at the last meeting, and sundry very emphatic speeches were made by gentlemen interested, as to what they would do, and others should not do in the premises. It is requisite now that the public should wake up to the importance of this subject. If the attention of tax-payers is turned, as it should be, to the consideration of this case, it will, perhaps, be the last, as it is the first, which will occur of such a nature.

Boards of Supervisors are created by statute, and have authority, especially granted to them by the Legislature, to raise money for certain specific purposes. Like other persons or corporations created by statutes, their powers are defined, and they are not permitted to exercise powers which are not granted either expressly or by implication. If the Board of Supervisors, without any granted power, are allowed to usurp the right now of levying a tax of two hundred thousand dollars, and such an instance is raised into a precedent which may be followed, there will be, hereafter, no bar or hindrance to their plundering the community at discretion. There is, in fact, no reason why the Mayor and Street Commissioner should have limited their present demand to two hundred thousand dollars. They might, with equal propriety, have asked for five millions, or fifty. Enormously as taxation has of late years increased, there is no instance on record, as yet, of a levy for any purpose which has not been specifically set down by the Legislature of the State; nor does any statute exist authorizing the levy of "usual and necessary taxes" (!) by the Supervisors. The very idea is monstrous, and it is evident that any such exercise of the power of taxation, not given by the Legislature, would be void.

The question whether this especial tax of two hundred thousand dollars for the Central Park is of such importance and such a nature that it is wise and prudent to force the meaning of some statute for the purpose of obtaining it, will be answered by the common sense of every law-loving citizen. Whether there may not be personal and political motives which have established so singular an alliance as that which, for the moment exists, between the Street Commissioner and the Mayor, we do not choose at present to consider. It is only necessary now to ask whether any power has ever yet been granted by the Legislature to the City and County of New-York to raise money for Central Park purposes. And this question has been amply and conclusively answered by the Corporation Counsel, as follows:

"The power to raise the specific sum of two hundred thousand dollars, by taxation, to be used by the Commissioners of the Central Park, if it exist, must be found in the act of April 12, 1856, to enable the Supervisors of the City and County of New-York to raise money by tax, the power to tax, conferred by former acts, having been exercised and exhausted. By this act the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of New-York are * * empowered * * to order and cause to be raised, by tax, on the estates, real and personal subject to taxation according to law, a sum not exceeding three million two hundred and forty-seven thousand one hundred and eighty-nine dollars, for (certain enumerated) objects and purposes.

The Supervisors are also empowered to raise $828,500 for the expenses of the police in said City and County, and a further sum of $396,367 to be applied toward the expense of lighting the City, and a further sum of $415,982 83 to be applied toward defraying the deficiency in taxation in said City and County for the year 1855. (§1.)

The Act further provides that 'No portion of the said respective sums shall be expended or applied to any other purposes or objects than said objects and purposes respectively for which the Board of Supervisors of said City and County of New-York are hereinbefore empowered to raise the same as aforesaid.'

The question then resolves itself into this, namely, whether, where an act permits money to be raised by tax, not exceeding a certain sum, for certain specified purposes, and directs that it shall be applied to no other purposes, the Board of Supervisors have a right to raise an amount exceeding that sum, and for a purpose which is not specified. I think they have no such right.

One of the objects and purposes enumerated in the statute, for which money may be raised by tax, is 'for such other expenses as the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York may be put to by law.' It is worthy of notice that the amounts which may be raised and applied to the other purposes and objects specified in the first section make up the whole sum of $3,247,189, and that while every other purpose has a specific amount authorized to be applied to it, no specific amount is authorized to be applied to the expenses which the Mayor, &c., may be put to by law. But without regarding the extent to which this observation bears upon the question it is well to consider directly, whether the $200,000 added by the Board of Supervisors to the tax levy is an expense to which the Mayor, &c., have been put by law?

And without considering whether the terms 'been put to by law' do not signify such expenses as have been judicially established in the courts, it will suffice to state another question which lies behind both.

Is the amount of $200,000 designated to satisfy the provisions of any legal contracts which have been made, and which the law would enforce against the City? Manifestly not.

It is designed to raise a fund, to be placed at the control of the Commissioners of the Central Park, or some other officer or officers, to enable them to proceed to complete the Park, according to the ordinance by which they were created. It does not differ in principle from any addition to the tax levy which might be made to enable any other officers to do any work for the City; and if one addition to the tax levy, not authorized by the statute, be permissible, any other is equally so.

The clause under consideration, thus extended, subverts the purpose of the statute, which is, amongst for every item, to limit the sum which the Supervisors are permitted to impose. And the grounds which restrict taxation are broken down, so that the Supervisors have the power to tax any man to the whole amount of his property.

The Rival Routes to Australia.

The question of communication between England and her Australian Colonies is no longer a question of moderate or small importance. The very extraordinary increase in population, opulence and power which those Colonies have experienced within the last seven years, and the determined spirit of independence and self-reliance which they are now beginning to manifest, make it pretty evident that the time has gone by when their interests could be neglected with safety. It is dangerous then, under present circumstances, for the Imperial Government to evince a disposition to sacrifice Australian interests to those of incorporated Companies or even the mother country.

But in the question to which this article relates the mother country is not in antagonism to her Colonies. So far as communication with those Colonies is concerned the interest of mother and daughters are perfectly identical, and, therefore, the action of the British Government relative to this matter is the more unaccountable. Regular and frequent mails from Australia to England would be not less advantageous to business people in the old country, than regular and frequent mails from England to Australia would prove to the inhabitants of the new. Is it not, then, singular that the Imperial Government should have selected that route for the conveyance of the mails in question, which is objectionable in every point of view, and which the public voice in both countries has condemned? Singular though it be, however, it is, nevertheless, a fact. Beside that circuitous ocean route round the Southern extremity of the African continent, and that other route round Cape Horn, which is equally circuitous, there are two more direct and shorter routes by which communication can be carried on between England and her Australian Colonies, and, so far as the transmission of mails is concerned, either of those routes is considered infinitely superior to the former ones. These shorter routes are the Southwestern route, by Panama, and the Southeastern route, by Suez.

But very different are the advantages which the two routes in question respectively present. The latter traverses the Atlantic to Gibraltar, and the whole length of the Mediterranean to Alexandria—then crosses Egypt to Suez; and, after threading the Red Sea to Aden, pursues its course through the dangerous and tempestuous Indian Ocean to Sydney or Melbourne. By this route the transmission of mails and merchandise is tedious and uncertain—the average time required for the passage from England to Australia being not less than one hundred and twenty days, while not unfrequently a much longer time is consumed in it. The Southwestern route traverses the Atlantic Ocean to Aspinwall, crosses the Isthmus of Darien to Panama, and then takes its way through the smooth Pacific to the land of those embryo commonwealths which are rapidly approaching the period of their political birth and independence.

The advantages which this route possesses over the other are of a very decided character. Mr. W. H. BAYLIS, an Australian Ex-Mayor, who recently traveled over it, has addressed a communication to the London Times, which places those advantages in a very striking point of view. There being as yet no line of steamers between Panama and Melbourne, Mr. BAYLIS, when returning home, had to make the voyage from Melbourne to Valparaiso in a sailing vessel; from the latter port he proceeded to Panama in a steamer; thence crossed the Isthmus by railway to Aspinwall, and was conveyed from Aspinwall to Southampton by the West Indian mail packet. He had gone out by the Suez route, and having returned by the Panama one, he was qualified by experience to contrast the advantages and disadvantages of the two lines, and to speak with authority on the subject. He says that he never met a person that had made the Anglo-Australian journey home or out by way of the Pacific, who would dream of attempting it by the Indian Ocean, if there was on the former that reasonable certainty as to arrival and departure which steam would afford. Sailing on the Pacific he pronounces like sailing on a mill-pond, and he avers that, if a line of steamers were established between Panama and Melbourne, and in connection with those of the Royal West India Mail Company, the passage from England to her Australian colonies could be made on an average in fifty days, which would be considerably less than one half the usual time at present consumed on the Southeastern or Suez route. We need hardly add that Mr. BAYLIS's opinion of the superiority of the Panama route, is also the opinion of all intelligent persons as well in England as in Australia. And such being the case, does it not seem strange that the Imperial Government, in defiance of public opinion in the mother country and the colonies, and to the manifest injury of commercial interests, should obstinately persist in keeping its eyes shut to the advantages of the Panama route and the disadvantages of that by Suez?

Mr. Fillmore and the Massachusetts Whigs.

The Boston Daily Advertiser, which may be regarded as the organ of fossiliferous Whiggery in New-England, and is known to speak the sentiments of Mr. EVERETT, has at last declared itself on the subject of the duty of the Whigs in the present contest for the Presidency. If any hopes had been entertained by the friends of Mr. FILLMORE that this "respectable daily" would espouse his cause, they have been effectually disposed of by its leader of yesterday, which concludes thus:

"It must be quite unnecessary to say anything further on this head, for so slight under present appearances is the prospect that Mr. FILLMORE will receive a support from his own party which can be of any avail to him, that the Whigs might as well throw away their votes by setting up an electoral ticket of their own, as by borrowing for the same object that of the American Party. We do not assume this as a certain result, but it seems so probable that we would not recommend to the Whigs the adoption of any system of action based on so uncertain an event as the success of the Fillmore ticket in any one State of the Union."

The drouth in New-Jersey is becoming quite severe. The water in the streams is very low, and vegetation everywhere is suffering.

Death of an Artist.

The Patriarch of American Landscape Painters, THOMAS DOUGHTY, died on Wednesday last, in this City, of a disease [illegible] Doughty was in his [illegible] year. He was a native of [illegible] and was [illegible] of property equal to the [illegible] art for which there was no [illegible] demand. Mr. Doughty was one of the first of our native artists who distinguished himself in landscape painting. He was born in Philadelphia in the year 1793, and spent the early part of his life in the business of a leather dresser, of which he served a regular apprenticeship. His exhibited [illegible] painting was a pure inspiration, and he adopted it as a profession without ever having any instruction. Whatever merit he possessed was the result of his own unaided study and observation of nature. He painted a great number of landscapes, some of which were sold at a good price, and at one time enjoyed a reputation almost equal to that of COLE. But of late years his pictures had gone out of fashion, and he was put to the necessity, peculiarly mortifying to an artist, of disposing of his productions by means of a raffle. He spent some years abroad, and some of his best pictures are views of English scenery.

Only the day before Mr. Doughty died, the subjoined letter by one of the most eminent of his brother artists, was addressed to one of our cotemporaries:

Some months since the friends of THOS. DOUGHTY, the landscape painter, opened a subscription for his relief. As their Treasurer, I would acknowledge the kindness which prompted many to send the various sums which have mainly sustained his family during a long illness. The veteran painter is now in the last extremity, entirely unconscious, and much in a few hours breathe his last. I shall be glad to receive, and to see well applied, any sums which may be intrusted to me, by those disposed to aid in relieving the distresses of his family.

Medical.

The American Medical Association has delegated Dr. ISAMON GLOCK, of this City, to the Congress of Physicians and Naturalists at Vienna. The Doctor was a distinguished surgeon in KOSSUTH's army.

Chemists have been in the habit of asserting that so little iodine can be dissolved in water that only 1-7,000 part of iodine by weight will be found in the common aqueous solution. Dr. AUSMAN, of this City, says that he can dissolve ½ of a grain of the iodine in an ounce of simple Croton water. He claims that his preparation does not produce the ill effects that occasionally attend the administration of the solution of iodine with iodide of potassium, or by means of alcohol.

The Medical Monthly thinks that the resolution passed at the Detroit Session of the National Association, on the motion of Dr. MELLS, was a petty exhibition of Philadelphian spite and jealousy toward New-York doctors.

MISCELLANEOUS.

JULES MUMM & CO.'S
CHAMPAGNES.
By an arrangement with the House of MESSRS. J. G. & J. SOKER, of New York, the undersigned now imports these famous Wines, viz:
MOUSSEUX, CABINET AND VERZENAY,
direct from Rheims, and is enabled to offer them to his patrons and the public upon the most favorable terms. As there are two brands of Champagne Wine in the market of the same name, without interfering with patent rights, it seems to be proper to state that the Mumm's Wines were first introduced in this market by the Messrs. Soker, in the year 1835, that these Wines obtained great celebrity here, and that upon the division of the firm at Rheims on the 1st of January, 1843, by which two houses were formed, namely: Jules Mumm & Co., and G. H. Mumm & Co., the latter house continued the original establishment, and to this time has maintained also the reputation of the Mumm's Wines, by exporting only first of the most approved quality.
By a careful examination of the best wines in the market, aided by the experience and advice of a able judge, the undersigned selected from the different brands,
THE CHAMPAGNE WINES OF JULES MUMM & CO.,
as the crowning wine of all the rest. For purity, delicacy of flavor, and uniform quality, these Champagnes are now presented, with a full assurance of its being the best Wines in the market.
FRED. S. COZZENS,
Importer, No. 75 Warren-st., New-York.

G. H. MUMM & CO.'S
CHAMPAGNE WINES,
By an arrangement made personally with the well-known house of
G. H. MUMM & CO.,
RHEIMS, FRANCE,
the undersigned is now prepared to offer to his friends and the trade to order purchasers, on the most favorable terms, the various brands shipped by them to this country, namely:
"THE VIN CREMANT," or RED RIBBON WINE,
"THE IMPERIAL," "THE CABINET,"
"THE VERZENAY,"
and
"THE DRY VERZENAY."
And as mistakes are constantly occurring, in consequence of their being two brands of Champagne Wine in the market of the same name, annoying to the friends and prejudicial to the interests and reputation of the Wines of Messrs. G. H. Mumm & Co., it is deemed proper to state, in order to avoid as far as possible the recurrence thereof, that on the dissolution of the late firm of P. A. Mumm & Co., in January, 1843, two houses were formed, namely:
G. HERMAN MUMM & CO.,
JULES MUMM & CO.
The former retaining at its head William de Bary, Esq., who, for the ten years preceding, had had the entire and exclusive superintendence and management of the affairs of P. A. Mumm & Co. They also constructed a much-enlarged and greatly-improved establishment, with storehouses and cellars, unrivaled in advantages by none in Europe; and engaged, with hardly an exception, all the most skillful and trusty employes of the old firm, of every grade, from the veteran "Master Cellarman" to the energetic old lady who presides over the "Bottle Washers," by which they, and they alone, are enabled to maintain the Original Mumm's Wines.
After a thorough examination and careful comparison of the various brands in the market, aided by long personal experience, and guided, in some degree, by the advice of approved connoisseurs, the undersigned, anxious to supply his friends and customers with an article equal to the best, selected the Wines of
G. H. MUMM & CO.,
not only for their purity, delicacy of flavor, and uniform quality, but also because, from their acknowledged popularity and well-known reputation, his chances of making money would be enhanced. And although he confines himself to the sale of this brand of Champagne he does not designate it as "the crowning wine of all the rest;" nevertheless he has no hesitation in presenting it "with the full assurance of its being" in every respect superior to the so-called "best wines in the market."

INTERESTING FROM WASHINGTON.

Arrival of Mr. Burlingame—Schuyler Colfax Renominated—The Debate in the House on the Army Bill—Guano Discoveries, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, July 24.

Mr. BURLINGAME arrived to-night. His friend, CLIFTON, of Ohio, named Canada as the place of meeting, and claims his own responsibility therefor. I understand that Mr. BURLINGAME objected to it, but it might be deemed inconvenient by BROOKS, but Mr. CAMPBELL properly insisted that that was his business.

News has been received here to-day that SCHUYLER COLFAX has been re-nominated by acclamation by the Republicans of the Ninth District of Indiana.

The debate in the House to-day was exciting and interesting, showing that the Kansas question takes the deepest hold of any pending. It is the determination of the Republicans to insist on their amendments, declaring the Kansas laws null, even if they lose the Army bill by it.

Mr. MORRISON intends moving an amendment, that no money appropriated by the bill shall be expended until such grounds are entered on the Kansas indictments for constructive treason.

The Senate, to-day, passed an important bill for the protection of American discoverers of guano islands—inviting them, however, to the exaction of four dollars per ton for guano in the native bed, and eight dollars at ship-side.

Special advices from London encourage hopes of an early settlement of the Central American question. The most serious difficulty now is the controversy between Costa Rica and Nicaragua as to jurisdiction over the mouth of the San Juan. S.

The Affair between Messrs. Burlingame and Brooks.

FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, July 24, 1856.

The Brooks and Burlingame case continues to excite general interest. The rumors about another affair between BROOKS and BURLINGAME are absurd. These gentlemen have no quarrel, and Mr. BURLINGAME is not likely to accept anybody's challenge upon a mere technicality. He is not a duellist, and only agreed to meet BROOKS to save the representation of his State from the reproach of being valorous in speech and cowardly in action.

The general impression is that BROOKS has backed down. Niagara Falls is by no means an unusual place of resort for duellists, and very many considerations may strongly recommend it. If I have not been misinformed, moreover, it was not selected by Mr. BURLINGAME himself, but by one of his friends; and BURLINGAME expressed the fear that they might object to the distance. His friend told him that that would be ridiculous;—that it was the most secure place to be found, and no exception could decently be taken to it. BURLINGAME finally assented, saying that he was willing to go there, or to Havana, Bermuda, or the middle of South Carolina if necessary.

I have been told, too, that when Mr. CAMPBELL informed Mr. LAND that Canada was the place selected, he made no objection. The first that anybody heard of objections being made was from the published card of BROOKS, refusing to fight.

It is said that Mr. BURLINGAME intends, at his leisure, to publish a counter-statement to that of BROOKS', in which he will supply the omissions and correct the misrepresentations by which Mr. BROOKS has sought to make out a case for himself.

It should be borne in mind that the private conversation at which BROOKS represents BURLINGAME as having disavowed any intent to offend Mr. BROOKS and as having expressed personal regard for him, was professedly a friendly interview,—at which Mr. BROOKS disclaimed any purpose of bringing a hostile message, and which he desired Mr. BURLINGAME to regard as perfectly confidential. The manner in which this was afterward used against him, and represented as an explanation made to avoid a meeting, is in the highest degree disgraceful to the parties concerned in it.

BROOKS is condemned even on his own statement of the case. When BURLINGAME's shall appear I think the condemnation of BROOKS and his co-conspirators will be still stronger. X. Y. Z.

XXXIVth CONGRESS.—First Session.

SENATE.... WASHINGTON, Thursday, July 24.

GUANO DEPOSITS.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill authorizing the protection of citizens of the United States who may discover guano deposits.

The bill was passed. It provides that whenever any citizens of the United States shall discover new guano islands, &c., not occupied by persons of any other Government, and occupy the same, they shall be considered as appertaining to the United States—the discoverers to be allowed the exclusive right of selling and delivering guano, and to receive $5 to deliver it at the vessel, and $4 at the place of deposit; the guano to be only for citizens of the United States. The land and naval forces of the country are to protect such islands, and the laws of the United States are to extend over them.

HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

The bills for the improvement of the harbors of Milwaukee and Kalamazoo were passed.

The bill for the improvement of the harbor at the mouth of Grand River was discussed until the adjournment.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, July 24.

A CALL OF THE HOUSE.

A call of the House was taken in order to procure a full attendance of members, of whom 140 only were present.

The doors were closed to hear excuses for absentees. None was offered for Mr. BURLINGAME. An hour and a half was thus consumed, when the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Army Appropriation bill.

THE MILITARY IN KANSAS.

Mr. HARBOUR moved to amend the clause appropriating $2,315,000 for the pay of the army, by adding a disapproval of the code of alleged laws of Kansas, and the manner in which they are enforced, expressly declaring that, until they shall be conformed by Congress, no part of the Federal military force shall be employed for their enforcement; nor shall any citizens of Kansas be compelled to act as a posse commitatus of any officer acting as Marshal or Sheriff in the Territory.

Mr. PHILLIPS raised a question that such amendment could not, by the rules, be embraced in the bill.

The Chairman, Mr. LETCHER, decided otherwise, and an appeal was sustained by the Committee by 74 against 54.

Mr. HARBOUR said his amendment was to stop resistance by preventing the enforcement of laws passed by usurpation, and disreputable and shameful in their character. Never before had the army been employed to arrest or disperse citizens pretended to be guilty of violating these laws.

Mr. HARBOUR recalled that the amendment proposed that there shall be no laws for the government of the people, and would close the Courts against redress for injuries in civil cases. This study had been sent to Kansas in obedience to the application of the Free-State men for their protection.

Mr. GUNDERSON did not think Congress had the power to control the President in the manner proposed; the President being Commander-in-Chief of the Army, they could not impose conditions.

Mr. HARBOUR said the territory Kansas had been declared to be territory, was legal, and its laws must be obeyed until abolished or changed by the proper tribunal. If he had his way, he should withdraw the military from Kansas, believing the people capable of self-government. He did not want troops to enforce obedience to these laws, but he would not have them used to arrest them on the hasty allegation of offence.

Mr. WASHBURN, German in his ideas, agreed with Mr. GUNDERSON, that the army should be withdrawn. He seen long time had been anxious for this, and would not give a farthing for the law which could not be sustained by the people. He denied the right of Congress to repeal the laws of Kansas. The Supreme Court of the United States was the proper tribunal to pronounce upon their legality. But for inflammatory speeches made here by Northern men, Kansas would now be as quiet as any part of the country. The Missourians, as charged, were not responsible for the disturbance.

Mr. SAVAGE said it was the duty of the President to enforce the laws and suppress all insurrection, hence the propriety of keeping military forces in Kansas for the preservation of peace. He characterized the object of the amendment to seize a power which Congress had no right to exercise, and as part of a game to obstruct the operation of the law.

Mr. SHERMAN said, when he was in Westport, he saw a large force of armed Missourians taking up the line of march for Kansas to enforce the pretended laws. These things are now done. Massachusetts men, and others from Free States, are prevented from traveling on the Highways by Missourians, and excluded from the Territory. Mr WASHBURN started with the company from Westport. He saw him go. In answer to a question by Mr. WASHBURN, he said that WHITFIELD informed him at that time that he was going over for peaceful purposes—to prevent a fight.

Mr. WHITFIELD explained at length, to the effect that he did not go with the Missouri force, but went with a small party to prevent difficulty—nothing more.

Mr. McMULLEN thought the pending proposition was a direct attack on the Executive department, with which the House had no right to interfere.

Mr OLDSMALL said the amendment is to prevent the enforcement of laws never passed by the people of Kansas. He was glad to see the opposite side of the House intended to place themselves on the ground of carrying out the original plot of repealing the Missouri Compromise, to make Kansas a Slave State. Free-State men have a right to go there in such numbers as they choose.

Mr. FLORENCE indignantly denied that he had voted to repeal the Missouri restriction for the purpose of making Kansas a Slave State. The gentleman from Indiana should not so accuse members of improper motives.

Mr. COX did not approve of all the laws of Kansas, but wanted them enforced till repealed or modified, hence he would keep an army there till the people return to a sense of justice and propriety.

Mr. KEITT attributed the troubles to a deliberate determination formed among certain members of Congress, pending the Nebraska-Kansas bill to make Kansas a free State. The adoption of the amendment would leave the Territories in a condition of discord and civil war.

Mr. STEPHENS, replying to Mr. CUTHBACK, said as a Southern and National man, it was not his object in voting for a repeal of the Missouri restriction to make Kansas a Slave State. He wished to leave the people to settle their own institutions.

Mr. CHADSEY made a similar avowal.

Mr. GUTHRIE in condemning the amendment, did not believe those who spoke in favor of it would dare to usurp a power not granted by the Constitution, by assuming the functions of the Judiciary and depriving the President of the duty imposed on him by that instrument.

Mr. WAKEMAN contended that Congress can repeal not only part but all the laws of Kansas. The Constitution gave ample powers. The Senate has so declared in its Kansas bill.

Mr. SEWARD said Mr. WAKEMAN stood forth as an open violator of the Constitution. He was opposed to the withdrawal of the forces, because if this was done civil war would forthwith ensue.

Mr. MILLSON deprecated the introduction of the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS advocated it on constitutional grounds.

Mr. STANTON moved an amendment declaring the laws of Kansas null and void. He would stand by this, even at the hazard of the loss of the bill.

Cries of "Agreed."

Messrs. LETCHER and BOWIE earnestly opposed these proceedings.

Mr. STANTON's amendment was agreed to by 67 against 56.

Mr. HARBOUR's proposition, thus amended, was adopted by 72 against 67.

The House has yet to vote on the bill.

The Committee then rose.

THE KANSAS CONTESTED SEAT.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, from the Committee on Elections, reported a resolution declaring Mr. WHITFIELD not elected to a seat, and that Mr. REDFIELD be admitted to the seat as delegate from Kansas.

Mr. WASHBURN gave notice that he will call up the resolution on Wednesday next.

Recess till 7 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

POLITICAL MATTERS.

Mr. CLARK condemned the repeal of the Missouri Compromise as the source of the strife and heartburning prevalent throughout the country and the bloodshed in Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Kentucky, gave notice of his intention to speak of the corruptness of the Government, from the period of Mr. BUCHANAN's connection with it, holding himself responsible in or out of the capitol for what he may utter.

Mr. BRENTON argued against Slavery extension, and exposed the inconsistencies of the Democratic Platforms on that subject.

Mr. BRAGG, while defending Mr. BUCHANAN, said that the continuance of Mr. FILLMORE in the Presidential contest must very greatly increase Mr. FREMONT's chances of election. In support of this opinion he quoted the New-York Courier and Enquirer and Tribune. He reviewed, in condemnation, Know-Nothingism, North and South, charging that in the former section it is allied with Abolitionism.

Mr. EVANS opposed filibusterism, replying to the speech of Mr. GUTHRIE, and condemning the designs of Mr. BUCHANAN as avowed in the Ostend Conference. Adjourned.

The Affair of Honor—The Herbert Trial—Return of Mr. Burlingame.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, July 24.

Mr. CAMPBELL, in a card published in the Union, requests a suspension of public opinion in relation to the statement of Mr. BROOKS until Mr. BURLINGAME returns to Washington.

In the Herbert murder case the counsel for the prosecution have opened their argument before the Jury, who have two sets of instructions before them. Nobody believes that the Jury will agree upon a verdict.

Mr. BURLINGAME has returned, and appeared in the House to-night.

Steam Communication Between Charleston, S. C., and Oswego.

The steamer Wilmington, from Charleston, S. C., arrived here this morning, via Quebec.

NEW-YORK CITY.

Tied Hand and Foot—The O. U. A.'s bind the Consciences of their Members.

The O. U. A.'s insist that their members must vote for FILLMORE or render themselves liable to expulsion. Some of the members may not have opened their eyes to this fact, but it is so, as every one will find on announcing his intention to vote for anybody else. Many in good and regular standing suppose that unless there is a Catholic in the case, they are at liberty to vote as their consciences dictate. At a regular meeting held on Wednesday night, at their hall, corner of Grand and Ludlow, the matter was discussed, and the Chair decided, after the reading of the "Private Work" of the Order, that no member could vote at the coming election for any other candidate for the Presidency than MILLARD FILLMORE. The Order having ratified that nomination in a State Convention held last Monday night, (when only one voted NAY, and he afterwards seconded the motion to make it unanimous)—the decision is that every member of the Order must vote FILLMORE and DONELSON, or be ejected neck and heels. The Order will not refuse, of course, to give a man his certificate of honorable discharge upon his application, but it will not give a "card of withdrawal," which entitles a member to rebater upon application to another Chapter within a year. So if an O. U. A. chooses to vote for FREMONT, he does it at the risk of losing all the benefits that he might receive for the $6 per annum which he has been paying year after year. And yet no one, in the handbook which he receives as his guide as to the duties and privileges of membership, would get any inkling of the fact that his conscience is thus bound. We publish this statement for the enlightenment of some good members who have before now voted the right way, in ignorance of the fact that they were disobeying a secret rule of their Order.

Columbia College.

At the conclusion of the Commencement exercises of Columbia College on Wednesday, President KING took occasion to administer a rebuke to Mr. VAN RENSS, the young gentleman who, in the course of the English Salutatory Address, referred to the President's public efforts in behalf of Free Soil. We mentioned yesterday the effect of this allusion upon the feelings of the audience. It was very late in the day when the graduating class was called up to receive the parting address of the President, who stated that the remarks of the young gentleman in question were wholly inappropriate to the occasion, that they had taken the President himself by surprise, and were unauthorized by the Faculty, and that he had not seen them in the original draft of the address when it was submitted for revision. Under these circumstances, the President deemed it his duty to disavow any responsibility for the utterance of the words, and condemned it proper to administer a rebuke in this public manner.

Central Park Police.

The following additional men were appointed yesterday, on the Central Park Police:

Josiah M. Cooper, Sergeant; Peter Schlosser, Dennis Dreddy, Edward Grant, Thomas Hodgson, Wm. Mountjoy, Timothy Oakley, Henry H. Acker, Charles McGuire, Horace A. Bliss, Mathias Goetzel.

The entire Police force, at the Central Park, with the above new appointments, now number thirty-one, including a Captain and four Sergeants. Heretofore there has been only a day patrol. A night patrol will be stationed, hereafter, to guard against the nocturnal depredations that have been so frequent on the grounds, and particularly to prevent the reception of stolen goods, of which parties, occupying different tenements in the Park grounds, have been large and constant receivers. Meanwhile the Police force on duty thus far have not received a cent of the City's money yet for their services, and are uttering murmurs, "deep and loud," against Comptroller FLAGG.

The Carmen on Living Out of Town.

Our readers will remember that the Common Council have lately passed a very sensible ordinance, allowing carmen doing business here to live out of town as far as they choose, if only they live within the State. There was circulated, from hand to hand yesterday, among those opposed to the measure, a call to the carmen, to meet at Military Hall, and protest against it. But others than those opposed, hearing of it, went to the Hall, and instead of a remonstrance, the meeting quite unanimously passed the following vote of thanks and resolutions:

Resolved, That the Carmen of the said meeting return their thanks to the Common Council, for passing an ordinance permitting Carmen to live out of the City, if only they live in the State of New-York, and that they earnestly pray the Mayor of the City to sign the ordinance as amended, forthwith.

Resolved, That a Committee of five be appointed to wait on the Mayor, and respectfully request him to sign the ordinance as passed by the honorable the Common Council.

Medical Arrangements at Quarantine.

Yesterday afternoon the Board of Health, together with members of the Emigration Commission, met at the house of Dr. HARRIS, at Quarantine, and arranged with Dr HARCOURT to officiate until cold weather as special assistant physician. That gentleman will enter upon his duties immediately, and from his known fitness, (strongly testified by Dr. FRANCIS, who was present,) and from the evident amicable feeling which prevailed, the appointment is likely to be satisfactory.

The Slaver Brazen Case.

Yesterday, before Commissioner BETTS, HENRICO DE CASTRO gave bail in the sum of $7,000 on two indictments, one for being engaged in fitting out the Brazen for the slave-trade, and the other with sending her away to engage in the slave traffic on the coast of Africa. The trial is set down for the first Monday in August.

Erie Railroad Losses.

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, July 22, 1856.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Statements having appeared in several papers to the effect that the New-York and Erie Railroad Express had been subjected to another loss of from $20,000 to $30,000, and these statements having undoubtedly been made by interested parties for mischievous purposes, it is due to the stockholders of this Company and the public that the facts should be made known. It is true that the office of this Company, No. 175 Broadway, was robbed, and $8,635 abstracted from the safe. Of this amount, $1,275 belonged to individuals, and the balance consisted of remittances to this Company.

The above is the first and the only loss which the Company has sustained by their Express.

(Signed) HOMER RAMSDELL, President.

Paving Contracts—Effect of Inspector's Certificate.

MARINE COURT.—Charles Devlin, Assignee, vs. The Mayor, &c., of New-York.—Before Justice MATSELL, July 24, 1856.—Action to recover for Paving Second-street, under a contract with the Street Commissioner. The plaintiff showed the filing of the Inspector's Certificate, that the work had been satisfactorily done.

For the defence, it was alleged that the contract required, as a condition precedent to payment, the confirmation of the assessment list by the Common Council, which had never been done in this case. Evidence was also given that the Inspector's Certificate was palpably wrong, and that the work had not been done according to the contract.

COSTS—EXCEPTIONS.

Peter Butler vs. The steamboat Liberty.—A decree was had in this case in favor of the libelants, and a reference was had, on which witnesses were examined before the Commissioner. Exceptions being taken to the Commissioner's report, they were argued on the testimony taken before him.

The Clerk in taxing the costs allowed $2 50 for each witness examined before the Commissioner, as a deposition under the fee bill. On appeal Judge BETTS overruled the taxation and disallowed the item.

☞ When you feel peculiar pain, at this season, in the head, with some confusion of ideas, having been previously in a fair state of health, lose no time, for the case will seldom bear it, but swallow at once four, six or eight of BRANDRETH's PILLS. Your life will be saved and your health soon reestablished by this course. During hot weather the secretions of the bowels are often scanty, before an attack of dysentery, especially. Now is the time for action:

Cease to put into the stomach what it cannot digest. Above all, purge out the bad humors, and thus remove the cause of disease. A few doses of BRANDRETH'S PILLS will remove all pain, uneasiness and inconvenience. Institution to this simple advice will in all probability be followed by congestion or inflammation of the Liver, or of other organs. Larger doses for a longer period will then become necessary, and much needless pain must be endured.

Lord BACON wisely sagaciated: "Man's body, of all things in nature, is most susceptible of remedy." That is true: for all diseases have their origin in an impure state of the blood, and BRANDRETH'S PILLS, by expelling these foul humors, will render the blood cold and perfectly pure.

I present the following letter confirmatory of the above: THE REMITTENT FEVER OF THE ISLAND OF ST. THOMAS CURED BY BRANDRETH'S PILLS.

NEW-YORK, May 21, 1856.

Dr. BENJ. BRANDRETH—Dear Sir: It seems to me to be a duty to say that, when I was United States Consul at St. Thomas, in 1849, I used your Pills with very great advantage. I was taken with the fever peculiar to that Island, the doctor bled me, and I was in very great danger of dying from that fever and the doctoring. The Island fever was so much that no quantity of drugs seemed to relieve it. I was constituted in very great danger, and I felt that my hold of life was really very feeble. In this condition I was recommended to use your Pills. I at once took eight. Their effect was surprising. They caused to be expelled by laxitiveness. Thrill had then searching all over my stomach, even up to my throat; every vessel of the body was aroused to action. I continued to use them until I had taken two boxes, containing twenty-five pills each, when I was quite recovered to my usual health.

Governor GUNNISON expressed to me the opinion that the BRANDRETH PILLS were the best medicine he had ever known; that he entirely relied upon them when he or his family were sick. He could not be without them for any money; that he believed you had been the means, by introducing them, of saving many valuable lives—an statement in which I cannot more cordially.

I desire, my dear Doctor, if you think the above of any service, you will not be afraid to publish it.

I am, very truly, your friend,
CHARLES H. DELAVAN,
Late U. S. Consul for the Island of St. Thomas, West Indies.

THE POPULAR KNOX.—Popularity is not always to be acquired by the simple application of the facilities of the press. Notoriety may be, but that species of notoriety which is accompanied by a general esteem is a different thing, and is the result only of such a course of conduct as first excites the general attention and then exacts its respect. This is the secret of KNOX's fame as a manufacturer and dealer in hats, and explains why his dashing establishment, at the upper corner of Broadway and Fulton-street, is so filled with eager and satisfied customers. KNOX's enterprise, his honorable dealing, the courtesy of his attendants, as well as the taste and quality of his goods, and the moderate profits he is contented with, constitute the elements of his wonderful and well deserved success, and make his location, the corner par excellence, for all who wish for good hats, caps, &c.

Brutality.

A driver of a coal cart, named JOHN MCALLAR, was arrested in the Eastern District of Brooklyn, on Wednesday by Officer DOUGHTY, of the Eighth District Police, for beating a horse he was driving. This brute, because the horse refused to draw to suit his wishes, beat him, and finally took the horse's tongue and drew it out until the blood started. Walk of shoes on the feet was the cause of the apparent stubbornness of the animal. Justice MCCLARY held the accused to answer.

THURSDAY, July 24—P. M.

The dullness at the Stock Exchange continues, and although a little more was done to-day than earlier in the week, prices for some of the prominent Road shares further receded, and closed heavy. The last price of Erie was 61¾ ₹ cent. and Reading 81¾. New-York Central was firm at the early Board, but closed a fraction off, sales at 93@92¾. There was a large business in Illinois Central Construction Bonds at 92¾ buyer's option, and 92 seller's option; about $150,000 sold. The principal sales were by the leading operator for a fall. Southern Michigan Sinking Fund Bonds and Shares are firmer under the advices received from London of Mr. LITCHFIELD's successful negotiation. The general market closed heavy.

There was no change in money affairs, which work easy both for brokers' loans and short mercantile paper, at 6@7 ₹ cent. Discounts outside of bank 7 to 8 ₹ cent. The Exchange market has scarcely opened for the French steamer on Saturday; rates on England 109¾@109¾, France 5.17½@5.15. The propeller Lebanon took $150,000 in gold for Liverpool.
